TELEGRAPH.

FROM WASHINGTON.

Resignation of Mr. Forsyth with the Cabinet—Secretary of Interior Affairs—The Outside Appointment—The Agricultural Convention, Also Etc.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Nov. 30.

Mr. FORSYTH was present to-day, with the Cabinet, and gave an interesting detail of Mexican affairs. This statement will not render necessary any allusion in his Message, which is now finished.

Count Sartiges gave to-day a grand diplomatic dinner. Secretary Cass was among the guests.

The St. Andrew's Society have a banquet to-night.

My dispatch had stating announced the appointment of a board of "outside" engineers by Secretary Thomas, to examine the Specifications for Machinery [illegible] the new class-of-one gun building at [illegible]. The action of the Secretary has created some surprise with those unacquainted with the [illegible]. A board of the first engineers in the [illegible] was appointed and reported on these same specifications, and it is supposed that the appointment of a second board may be considered discourteous to the first; and further, that it is an assertion of the principle, the selection of "outsiders" for work and duty. It is an innovation of usage, but an innovation enabling Secretary Thomas to great praise. [illegible] sufficiently to look beyond the Bureau for information upon which to base the actual appointment of importance like this; but, in doing so, it is not from a feeling of disrespect for the engineers in the Navy, in whose skill and judgment he has the greatest confidence, but he recognized the fact that there dwell skill and judgment outside the Navy also, and, by consulting them, Governor Thomas based his preliminary selection of outside importance upon which errors in the course of the first examination.

The Convention called by the Agricultural Division of the Patent Office, also noticed in my dispatch last evening, is indeed a strange affair, and may call for an extended notice after all the facts are known. I learn to-day that circulars have been issued, addressed to almost every gentleman to different parts of the country, calling them in Convention to this city on the 1st of January next, and providing them mileage at five cents per mile and $10 each for board [illegible] while here. This will be a new feature in the operations of the Federal Government. What says Mr. Cass to the expenses of such a Convention? Is it authorized by the Secretary of the Interior? Who will have the selection of the gentlemen to compose this new Government Convention of Agriculturists? Look center under Investigating Committee.

The [illegible] manager of the Union was summarily discharged on the 22d inst. Douglas's speech had appeared in the Union of the 21st.

Ex-Secretary Guthrie, who is now here, has been appointed the Presidency of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company of Texas, and he has intimated a willingness to accept it, after an investigation, he is satisfied with the present condition of the Company. All the present officers are to go out and a new set elected.

[SPECIAL DISPATCH FOR THE ASSOCIATED PRESS.]

WASHINGTON, Tuesday, Nov. 30.

Lieutenant PAULDING TAYNALL arrived here to-day, bringing the Japan Treaty and dispatches from Consul HARRIS to the State Department.

An important recommendation will be made to Congress concerning the opening up of Utah to settlement by bringing up the lands into market and extending the preemption laws to that Territory.

THE SLAVE-TRADE QUESTION IN THE SENATE—BALLOTING FOR UNITED STATES SENATOR.

CHARLESTON, Nov. 26, 1858.

The interest felt in the case of the slaver Echo, about to be tried in the Federal Court in this District, has made itself manifest thus early in the Senate of this State, in the following resolutions, introduced into that body by Senator MASTER:

Resolved, That the Constitution of the United States contains no grant of power to regulate, prevent or restrict commerce among foreign nations; therefore all acts of Congress purporting to prohibit or interfere with the Slave-trade between foreign countries, are unconstitutional, and have no rightful binding effect.

Resolved, That the act of Congress declaring the Slave-trade to be piracy, if it be understood as affirming that it is piracy in the nature of things and in the sense of the Constitution, affirms what is not true; and inasmuch as it purports and intends to confer piracy what is not so in the nature of things, and, in the sense of the Constitution, the said act is unconstitutional, null and void.

These resolutions coming up for debate under the special order, Senator MAYRANT said:

Mr. PRESIDENT: Of the powers delegated by the Constitution to the Government of the United States there are but three by which the right to prohibit any description of trade can be inferred. One is the power given to Congress to regulate commerce with foreign States; another is the power to punish piracy and other offences committed on the high seas; and the third is that provision of the Constitution which, as it relates in express terms exclusively to the importation of slaves into the United States, has no application to the matter now before us. The power of the Government of the United States to define piracy, and to punish it as a felony, I will proceed to notice when I consider the second resolution, and I will now come at once, Mr. President, to the question of the power of Congress to regulate commerce with foreign nations. The plain interpretation of the Constitution appears to me to be the delegation to the Government of the United States of the power to regulate the commerce between the United States and foreign nations. If, therefore, we assume that the power to regulate includes the power to prohibit, it would confer upon the Government the right to prohibit the Slave-trade between the United States and a foreign country. But the resolutions introduced into this body do not say that it is unconstitutional to prohibit by acts of the General Government the Slave-trade between our own States and any other nation. They only assert the fact that it is not Constitutional for within the province of Congress to prohibit the traffic between two foreign countries. No commentator on the Constitution of the United States, so far as I have discovered, seems to have taken up the question as to how far the power conferred on the Government to regulate commerce between the United States and a foreign nation, includes the right to interfere in the commerce carried on between two other countries, distinct from our own. Justice Story, however, does touch indirectly on this feature of the question, when, after stating his reasons to show that the power to regulate commerce included navigation, concludes by saying: "This power the constitution extends to commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States with the Indian tribes. In regard to foreign nations, it is universally admitted, that the words comprehend every species of commercial intercourse. No part of trade or intercourse can be carried on between this country and another to which it does not extend. So that Justice Story plainly understood this delegated power to refer only to the commerce between the United States and foreign countries, and not to the commerce between foreign nations. Now, there are acts of Congress which purpose to interfere with the Slave-trade as carried on between foreign countries; and we have seen a case in point, and therefore, candor insists for the first time, in which the officers and crew of a vessel are charged with carrying on the traffic in slaves between Africa and the island of Cuba. Is the constitutionality of such acts alone that is debated in the resolutions before the Senate. Mr. President, in my humble judgment, it is a grave question, and one that is open to serious doubts, whether the power to regulate commerce includes the power to prohibit any branch of trade whatever. But that is a point that is left undisturbed by these resolutions, which merely declare that the power to regulate commerce doesn't extend to commerce between two foreign nations, and therefore, cannot include the power to prohibit the Slave-trade between foreign countries, and consequently the right of Congress to infer the power to punish piracy from the constitutional power to regulate commerce between our own and any other country. I will refer that feature of the question to some occasion at this time, and shall confine myself to the question that such power does not include the power to regulate commerce between foreign nations. Has anything the Congress of the United States done in pursuance

NEW BOOKS.

[illegible] AND PORT; OR, THREE OCEANS AND TWO [illegible]. By Commodore WARREN. New-York: [illegible].

[illegible] a live Yankee. He has been [illegible] by land and water, on mules, on foot, in [illegible], in canvas-carrying tube; skipper one day, [illegible] the next; supercargo, [illegible], night watchman, captain; among Ka[illegible]; among bodies; book-keeping in Mexico; [illegible] in Gallipoli; hard up in Australia; [illegible] home at last to tell his story, and urge the practicability of establishing a South-Pacific [illegible] Company. Mr. T. ROMESON WARREN's Port and Peak is a very readable book in [illegible] good deal better than the reader suspects [illegible] first takes it up. The opening sentence [illegible] bad one. What in bulk would make a chap[illegible] objectives might be picked out of the de[illegible] to their improvement; and not infre[illegible] Mr. LEMLEY MURRAY riding through, [illegible] to hold his horse firmly, prick [illegible], and leap a chasm—the grave of a lost [illegible] which a widowed verb sits by lament[illegible]. Once fairly started, however, the story is so [illegible], and is so fresh, that you no more quar[illegible] account of his little defects of [illegible] than you would think of for the microscopic [illegible] that trouble them.

About having whetted his appetite for [illegible] a Whaler's cruising in the Gulf of Mex[illegible] by Stimpson set out in February, 1849, [illegible] on board a fine bark bound round [illegible] being President of a company [illegible] shippers, who bought the bark, [illegible] and packed all the outfit and materials for [illegible] the mines. The little St. Mary had a [illegible] of it till she neared the line, where she [illegible] calm, and lay broiling under it for six[illegible] days. The tar oozed from the deck-seams, [illegible] in the cabin cracked, the water grew [illegible] in the casks. They drove their knife[illegible] into the masts, and whistled for wind till [illegible] was, perforce, a dead calm within their [illegible]. A southeast trade-wind came [illegible] at last and spun them into the harbor [illegible] Janeiro. While waiting here, everybody [illegible] astonished one morning to see steaming up the bay a dilapidated Long Island Sound boat, her [illegible] beam see-sawing as easily as it used to [illegible] when she rounded the Battery after a night's run from Saybrook. When she left New-York, bets ran high that she would see bottom before she [illegible] Rio. But here she was, safe and sound; and our traveler could not resist the temptation to quit the bark and go on board in hope of a short passage around the Horn, and so to make time enough to arrange handsomely for her company's reception in California. The sec[illegible] and day but the steamer caught a gale, was badly [illegible], and had to put in to St. Catherine's to repair. About a month afterward, this delicate old aggregation of saloons and cabins started again, and in ten days ran in to the Straits of Magellan, [illegible] the tide without trouble. The giant Pataga[illegible] came down to the banks to see the strange [illegible], and the llamas and ostriches which fed in herds on the shore, flew like the wind at the shriek of the steam-whistle. At last she came to anchor at Port Famine—a villainous settlement of starving criminals transported from Chili, with a broken-hearted, polished Governor, himself a criminal, at its head. The Port was rightly named. Of fresh provisions there were almost none, and still worse, not a pound of that native coal which they had expected to find in abundance. The steamer's stock would only hold out for another day, and fifty days' steaming were necessary to reach the nearest inhabited point. They had nothing left but to shoulder their axes, all green at the axe as they were, face a blinding snow-storm, and push into the woods. They wanted twenty-five cords a day, and to put it was a job for Hercules. From June 15 to the 27th—the southern mid-winter—they coasted along the coast of Terra del Fuego, chopping wood, and, accidentally, their legs often, wading through snow-drifts, groaning under the burden of trees that fell on them, and cursing their unlucky stars. Out of the Magellan Straits they then set out to sea, but followed Smith's Straits up the western shore of Patagonia, plowing an [illegible] sea, frightening innumerable flocks of ducks, geese and sea-fowl, driving herds of seals and sea-elephants before them. Fifty-three days after leaving the Atlantic, they glided out from between Chiloe and the Chilian coast to San Carlos, where they coaled, and pushed out into the Pacific. They paused at Constitucion long enough to hear Watts' hymns sung in the Presbyterian Church and to enjoy an earthquake—the earth yawning [illegible] tumbling into the chasms, and the sea boiling. Our author ran up in a volante from this port to Santiago, the capital, a town of seven square miles of substantial houses, inhabited by [illegible] women of a pure white and red complexion, and by most all gamblers and roues, and [illegible], at a certain season of the year, the old men spend their Sunday afternoons and evenings flying profusely ornamented kites, lighted up with lanterns, each kite having attached to it a knife—and great is the glee of the old men when they succeed in cutting a neighbor's kite string. Steaming northward they held up at Caldera, and at Arica, where Mr. WALKER EVANS, a Yankee, has run a railroad into the interior to fetch down Peruvian bark, copper, silver and wool; and then pushed on to Pisco. From Pisco, looking out seaward, some eleven miles, they saw the yellow mist rising, and [illegible] through it the three rocks which by their [illegible] of guano have made Peru bankrupt. Approaching them, there became visible a forest of masts, fleet of the finest merchantmen in the world riding there waiting their turn to be loaded, with the excrements and powdered carcasses of birds and seals. As the charters of these vessels compel them to await their turn, and as waiting of not less than 100 days is not uncommon, it would be exceedingly tedious, but that many of the captains have their families with them; by whose aid the solitaries and guano levees come off nightly, turning this mid-ocean rendezvous into one of the gayest watering places extant. Meanwhile the poor Chilians, sneezing, crying and coughing—for the ammonia acts every inch of their mucous membranes into inflammatory action—break up the guano with picks, wheel it into barrows to the brink of the bank and dump it into canvas funnels which convey it to the hold of the vessel so rapidly that at a day or two the crankest clipper is loaded to her utmost. Steaming northward again, our [illegible] hoist holds up at Callao, seven miles north of which, up an easy slope of green and granfields and banana and orange groves, lies Lima, in whose old cathedral is treasured the brown impalpable powder, reputed that remains on earth of the great PIZARRO. Northward again, they touch at Guayaquil, where are made the Panama hats, worth from $2 to $100, worn by all South Americans and West Indian gentlemen. Thence it was a short trip to Panama. Here, of course, are waiting for a chance to San Francisco, an innumerable mob from the Chiefs of Peccadillos, blackleg, cut-throats. They crowd the hotels; at dinner, sitting down to long, greasy pine-board tables, the dishes of all imaginable patterns and hues, the eatables uneatable, the drinkables a sense-like tea and an infusion of burnt woolen for coffee; their sleeping-rooms windowless vaults, holding 50 or 60 cots each; the furniture a row of tin basins, sundry chunks of soap perfumed in the fat, and one broad towel for a towel. Out of such gay quarters, our author gathered 300 worthy passengers, having to [illegible] accommodations for about half that number. Down to the guards, of course there came the rage of storm, with some little retching and [illegible]; the sea getting calmer, the gambling, [illegible], and fights began, and jointly ended when the precious company debouched upon San Francisco. Mr. WARREN saw the mushroom City burn down, December, 1849; then went up to the mines; was in Sacramento when the flood came; saw the church float off, wherein the women and children were deposited for safe keeping; saw men cut of their second-story windows hailing canoes to take them down the street in dismay; lost [illegible] by declining to buy lots in St. Mary's at [illegible]; was [illegible], while St. Marys was [illegible]; passed down to the [illegible] and was a [illegible] witness in Stockton, a city of 5,000 inhabitants, until news came in one fine morning that better diggings had been found, and before night not less people were left in the place. In the Summer of 1850, stale and used up, he returned to New-York.

In less than fifty days our quiet hero felt that he was growing rusty. Disgusted with the monotony of our money town, he had embarked in a little schooner-brig on a trip of 10,000 miles to Guayamas in Sonora. There he found a rich uncle and a squadron of pretty Mexican cousins, and was easily persuaded to become a book-keeper. Before working himself into a low fever, he had discovered how fushions was done. A merchant, expecting the arrival of a ship, is naturally anxious to evade a portion, at least, of the enormous duties which the Mexican Government levies upon all imports. So he stations a fleet boat off the harbor to communicate with the coming craft, and obtain an early copy of her manifest. This accomplished, the ship keeps off again until further orders. The merchant now goes to the Custom-house officer, tells him he expects a ship in soon, shows the manifest, and demands to know what she can be entered for, warning him that if the terms are not liberal, she shall be sent to some other port. After much haggling a bargain is struck, generally at a reduction of 20 or 30 per cent. on the tariff rates. The ship is signalled and stands in, pausing, however, to transfer a part of her cargo, of which there was no minute on the manifest, to a snug craft which runs along the coast, and lands it an appointed place, where the mule trains are in waiting. The muleteers hurry it into the city, being armed with forged passports and a new manifesto with the signatures of the European officers affixed, and their seals, duplicates of which are furnished to every merchant by his correspondents. So, a cargo actually worth $100,000 is entered for $50,000, there goes a bribe of $10,000 to the Collector, $2,500 to the Vista, and $2,500 to the guards, etc., leaving a clear profit to the merchant and loss to the Government of $35,000;—not loss to the Government either, for in nine cases out of ten all that the Government officials receive is absorbed in salaries, expenses, etc., and the Government must increase its tariff to raise the money to put down the pending revolution with. In this sort of thing, however, private enterprise cuts no figure beside the British Government vessels. Gold Dust and uncoined Silver are contraband; still the English men-of-war manage to smuggle out of Guaymas alone some $3,000,000 annually. The merchants are notified when a man-of-war intends to take home specie freight. The tars, in keeping of an officer, go ashore at night, make the rounds and return, each with his smuggling-jacket (underneath his shirt) heavily loaded. Balls are given on board, and each invited merchant's wife or daughter takes off a load of the dust in her dress. If, in any of these operations, the Mexican authorities interfere, it is an outrage upon British rights, and Mexico is the sick man again. Honest John Bull winks at this sort of thing, because freight on specie is one per cent., one-half of which goes to the Admiralty, one-quarter to Greenwich Hospital, and one-quarter to the Captain.

While our author was at Guayamas, Count RAOUSSET's unfortunate expedition to expel the savages of Northern Sonora, and found a French colony, was undertaken with the connivance of the Mexican Government. Jealousy at the capital and a counter expedition prevented its success—not, however, until RAOUSSET had captured Hermosillo, the capital, and fallen sick, during which sickness his company accepted a handsome gratuity and retired. SANTA ANNA being restored, the Count renewed his efforts, but the treachery of his Mexican allies this time foiled him. He was tried and sentenced, and stood cheerily facing a platoon of soldiers, when their volley of shot riddled his body, and he fell dead on his face.

While there, too, there arrived at La Paz a little man with a towy head, white eyebrows, cold blue eyes, his face one mass of yellow freckles, his dress in perfect keeping with his person. This was one WILLIAM WALKER, an ex-editor of San Francisco, whose honors ripened so fast that before he had disembarked his ragged army of outlaws and broken gamblers at La Paz, he was a General-in-Chief, and when, next morning, he learned that four men had run away with his fleet—to wit, the bark Carolina—he was straightway Governor of Sonora and President of Lower California. Soon after the fillibustering President had concluded his series of brilliant victories, according to the newspapers, and of disgraceful defeats as his fading army testified, our hero, disgusted with the monotony of Sonora life, bought half of a clipper-schooner, and went into the Coast-trade. In a semi-smuggling business he ran up and down the coast to and from Acapulco, caught yellow fever, ordered out of the run a bar of iron that would not permit his body to go bobbing up and down when they cast it overboard, its fishy eyes striking terror into the sailors' hearts as one poor fellow's had done just before, made his will, and—was well soon after. Next he took passage in a steam-tub, that had come out to California in the hold of an American ship, and which was put in command of his friend Capt. ELLIS, who had run down to Guayamas from San Francisco, a distance of 2,500 miles, in a yacht of 6½ tons register, assisted by a crew consisting of a mate and a cook. In Capt. ELLIS' steam-craft Mr. WARREN crossed over to the Sandwich Islands without a wreck on the way, fell in love with several Kanaka girls whom he found rollicking in the surf, attended a loyal levee at which the Queen did not appear, she being drunk, and left in a fine clipper for Manila, and thence in a heavy clipper to Hong Kong, where on landing he was sole possessor of $20, and of that only. In three weeks after, by a snug speculation he had pocketed in money half the value of a brigantine had set out on a tour of China, and again for Australia. He was struck with the solid appearance of Melbourne, its splendid avenues, its American hotel with its bridal chamber, its organized Police and good order; and outside the City, the gorgeous plumage of the songless birds struck him, and the beauty of the inodorous flowers. Next, as skipper of a dirty, top-sail schooner that leaked at every seam, yet was all alive with cockroaches, rats and centipedes, having a rascally crew on board that began to mutiny the first night, he made a trip to Tahiti and back. Next he took passage in a horrible old brig for Callao, but the Captain being three sheets in the wind, and the mate and his wife always drunk, by common consent he himself became sailing-master. His ugly craft was dismasted and driven into Pitcairn's Island; afterwards working up to the coast of Peru, he landed minus a dollar of funds. Soon after he was promoted to the captaincy of a steamer under Government charter, a nice quick craft, as may be guessed since Peru never enjoyed more than two several Presidents during any one of her trips up and down the coast. Meanwhile, Mr. WARREN had found time to marry, and his wife being attacked with yellow fever, he was obliged to return to New-York. We infer that he walks Wall-street now-a-days, and that the sight of every dandy clipper that goes down the East River stirs the sailor's blood in him and rebukes him for the slow life he leads. In his book he has been prodigal of his material. A practical book-wright would have worked up a good half dozen from it, and had enough left over for the plot of a charming series of Mount Vernon papers.

THE NEW PRIEST IN CONCEPTION BAY. 8 vols. Phila: SARTAIN & Co., Boston: 1858.

Whether this book is destined to become immediately and widely popular or not, it will have a decided and peculiar interest for a great many of the best sort of readers. It is not without faults—and plenty of them, perhaps—in the matter of construction and management of the story; but it has many singular and eminent merits. The author is evidently a man of ability, and as evidently without much practice as an artist.

There is nothing in the main or in the secondary plot, and the incidents are of a sort as familiar to the story-reading world as anything can be; yet there is a certain congruity between the story and the scene where it is laid, so that what we should find too trite and common-place in a crowded land and a more artificial life, is quite sufficient to interest us away up on the bleak barren coast of Newfoundland, with its bare rocks and [illegible] bays and scanty population, and rude but kindly-hearted fisher people.

The progress of the story is too often interrupted, or drags slowly, when the reader is desirous to get on; there is too much minute description of scenery and natural objects; somewhat too much about the peculiar dialect of the fisher folks; the stipendary magistrate, Mr. Naughton, is a fool of the Dogberry order, who sometimes annoys us in a way SHAKESPEARE would not have allowed; most readers will be quite sure (as we are) that the "New Priest" and Mrs. Barre are husband and wife almost from the moment they are brought together on the scene, near the beginning of the first volume, although the author keeps up a mystery about it half through the second. Ladford need not (for any purpose of the plot) have been drowned, and we feel unwilling to have him so dealt with merely for the sake of that prophetic "visage" of fourteen men getting into the Providential "punt;" and finally as to Bangs, although for a certain quality of humor that finds expression through him, and especially for the sake of his "not being a Democrat, and so not liking slavery," we would allow him and his absurdities some little space, yet we would gladly kick him out of his needless connection with the plot, and too great prominence in the book.

So much for the faults as they strike us. Now for the other side. And in the first place, the book should be looked at not so much as a story as a series of sketches of scenes and of character—and chiefly the latter. In this point of view it is full of things exquisitely beautiful and noble. There is "Skipper George." He reminds one, indeed, of old Peggotty; but he is yet an original creation, a true living individual, with his great heart and unconscious saintliness. There is Lucy, and the exquisite and delightful sketches of her and of her lover, in the first part of the story—although she disappears too soon from the scene, and is not quite rightly unfolded nor made enough of. Ladford, too, is a mere etching, but masterly, and showing in the author a rare power of insight and a rare power of revealing to others, by a stroke or two of his pencil, what he sees. Then there is Father Terence—in its sort one of the finest delineations to be found in books,—such a compound of weakness and noble manliness—such a poor head kept always in the right way by a rich loving heart. That question to de Brie about his conversion, "Are yo sure isn't it something about the wife and the world, it is, now!" is an inimitable revelation of the union of the loving and the honorable in the good Father's nature, of tender kindness, with the finest sense of uprightness. The whole scene—all, indeed, that passes between the two then and at other times on the subject, is full of beauty and pathos.

Of the conversion of de Brie, it is praise enough to say that it is not unsatisfactorily managed, for it is there precisely that a writer of inferior power would have broken down. It is very hard work to handle such a subject. A man capable of being misled not merely into a change of his religion, but into a renunciation of the most sacred and unchangeable of prior obligations for the sake of assuming new obligations not binding upon him, even by the theory of the new system he adopts—to make anything out of such a man, to make us respect and like him, and to reconvert him in any respectable fashion, is a very hard task; and the author has done wisely in rather giving us hints of the interior conflicts of the man, than a particular description of the process of his restoration.

As to the rest, we might point out many scenes and traits of exquisite humor, and many incidents and passages of the truest and most touching pathos. There is more than one page which can hardly be read without a little moisture coming into the dryest eye. And, in fine, there are few books that we have read of late, which would furnish a richer casket full of gems of beautiful or striking thoughts or images, and beautifully worded, if they could be detached from their settings in the scenes of this tale.

We hope this work is to be followed by others. The author has a nice sense of the beautiful in all things; a rich fancy, delicate humor, a true poetic imagination, an earnest love for what is true and genuine in character. Let him stir up the gift that is in him. Practice will perfect him in artistic power.

WOMEN OF BEAUTY. By F. B. GOODRICH. Royal 8vo pp. 400. Derby & Jackson, No. 119 Nassau-street.

The Literary World has been somewhat surfeited of late years with Books on Women. There has been no lack of gallantry on the part of authors towards the Femmes Celebres of History. We have seen the dear creatures "told off" in departments, catalogued in nationalities, and parcelled out in creeds. We have rehd of the Heroines of every country which could boast or imagine one. We have been introduced, in story and in song, to the Women of England. We have dozed over the Women of the Bible; woke up over the Women of Israel, and relapsed over the Women of the East. This last Book on Women, however, with which Mr. GOODRICH has just favored the Literary World, is in many respects calculated to attract more attention than any of the others. The title, however, though attractive enough, is a misnomer. We profess to entertain very fully the feeling of admiration and respect which Mr. GOODRICH very properly claims as the American sentiment towards the accomplished and excellent Queen of England. We can, for the sake of the conscientiousness and great ability of ISABELLA LA CATOLICA, Queen of Arragon and Castille, endeavor to forget the cruelties urged by TORQUEMADA, and not unwillingly decreed by his fanatical sovereign. But we trust we may say, without detraction from that respect or that forbearance, that neither of these personages can properly be ranked among "Women of Beauty." Mr. GOODRICH's book might, indeed, with much more propriety, have been called "A Beautiful Book about Women;" for it is a beautiful work in character, typography, and especially in the exquisite engravings with which it is profusely embellished.

The biographical comments are, comparatively speaking, brief. They could not well be otherwise, seeing that there are 19 ladies to be "disposed of" in 400 pages of large, readable type But Mr. GOODRICH has contrived, in the old Dick Tinto style, to compress into a page more varied information, historical, biographical, genealogical, scenic and classical, than it ordinarily falls within the power of authors to give in a sheet of 16 pages. His sketches of JOAN DARC, as Mr. G. shows the name should be written, MARY, Queen of Scots, and MARIE ANTOINETTE, especially, are so comprehensive as to leave nothing untold that it would be useful to know; while the history of one of the noblest and best of women—our truly illustrious countrywoman, Mrs. JUDSON,—a true tale of the saddest prose of misfortune,—has left Mr. GOODRICH's hands a poem which bestifies womanly constancy and truth, and is sanctified by its earnestness of devotion for those sacred qualities. There is no display of mawkish sensibility displayed by the author in telling the story of the humble but pains-taking missionary. He says what he has to say plainly and tersely, quite unconscious of the poetry which he was so gently and yet so effectively weaving around it.

The book professes to have selected characters from the time of SEMIRAMIS to that of EUGENIE, and it includes sketches of the lives of the following notable women: Semiramis, Penelope, Cornelia, Zenobia, Beatrice, (of Dante,) Joan Darc, Isabella, Diane de Poitiers, Anne Boleyn, Mary Queen of Scots, Pocahontas, Nell Gwynne, Lady Mary Wortley Montague, Marie Antoinette, the Maid of Saragossa, Ann Hazeltine Judson, Charlotte Bronté, Victoria, and Eugenie.

In his biographical sketch of VICTORIA, Queen of England, the author is enthusiastic in his admiration, without being at all fulsome in his adulation. He does not forget that he is writing of a Queen, but he describes her as though he were writing of an equally excellent woman who might be her subject. And his sketch will not be any the less admired by American readers because he has seen fit to exalt the women for the virtues which exalt woman, rather than for the blaze and splendor which surround her position. He introduces the Queen to his readers with a picture of her early education:

"In 1817 the Duke of Kent died, and in 1820 King George followed him; the accession of King WILLIAM placed the sceptre where it should be, and the heir-apparent was already dreaming of the day when it would best fit her to wear the crown. Without laying aside essential or ornamental branches, her tutors added to her, with every opportunity, the knowledge by which a queen might preside over a nation. They had learned from the most part in the Continental languages, and the education of a princess. She was made familiar with the lives and actions of all who had conferred honor upon the human race, whether as sovereigns, statesmen, scholars, inventors, discoverers, benefactors, poets, or divines. While yet in her nonage and not yet in her majority, she spoke English, French and German with equal fluency; she read Italian, and translated Virgil and Horace; she was a proficient in mathematics, and showed decided talent in all branches connected with the science of numbers. Accomplishments were not neglected, and the princess danced, sang, and sketched from nature. She laid aside a portion of her pocket money, to aid her mother in gradually extinguishing the indebtedness of her father. A sound religious training lay at the base of the labors thus reared, and VICTORIA was made to realize that as she was to reign over a nation professedly Christian, she must prove, by her private conduct and in her domestic life her right to the glorious title of Defender of the Faith."

The occasion of VICTORIA's first and sudden entrance upon her new and brilliant position is thus touchingly described:

"AT 5 o'clock in the morning, VICTORIA was informed by the Archbishop of Canterbury of the demise of her uncle, and of the vacancy upon the throne. The sovereignty of the most powerful nation of the earth lay at the feet of a girl of eighteen. That day VICTORIA entered upon public life. The grand officers of State, the Privy Councillors—a hundred or more of the highest nobility in the realm—assembled in Kensington Palace. It has been truly said that the pen and pencil have endeavored in vain to do justice to this impressive and affecting scene. The herald made his portentous announcement—'We publish and proclaim that the high and mighty Princess ALEXANDRINA VICTORIA is the only lawful and liege lady, and, by the Grace of God, Queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, Defender of the Faith.' At these formidable words, so fraught with blessing or calamity to the fair young lady they concerned, she threw her arms round her mother's neck and wept upon her bosom. Her uncle of Sussex, the last and youngest of her father's brothers, was about to kneel and take the oath of allegiance, when she playfully but resolutely stopped him, saying, 'Do not kneel, uncle; for I am still VICTORIA, your niece.'"

The scrupulousness with which VICTORIA paid the debts of her father, (who was at one time so poor as to be unable to afford the cost of transporting his family from Germany to England,) is not so well known as it deserves to be. The author of the "Women of Beauty" thus alludes to this trait in the Queen's character:

"One of the first measures of VICTORIA was to pay from her own privy purse the remaining debts of her father—those which she and her mother had been unable by their united economies to liquidate. The people contrasted the Queen's conscientious application of her resources with the conduct of her grandfather, GEORGE III., under similar circumstances. His father, FREDERICK, Prince of Wales, left behind him numerous obligations, not one farthing of which did GEORGE, on coming to the throne, think proper to discharge."

We believe that there is no American, and, indeed, that there are few men in the United States, who will refuse to concur heartily in the estimate which Mr. GOODRICH has formed of the character of the Queen.

"If the Queen is loved at home, she is admired abroad. In America there exists a more profound and abiding respect for VICTORIA than perhaps for any other living person. A practical people, we recognize and appreciate the value of her example to rulers and the ruled. It is a striking commentary upon our political consistency, that we acknowledge and pay homage to virtue and merit in a hereditary sovereign, and proverbially scrutinize, with little regard to their solid qualifications, the claims of our own elective officers. Who shall reconcile our enthusiastic reverence for the virtuous administration of a woman raised to power by the accident of rank, and the constitutional levity and indifference with which we pronounce upon the fitness of those whom we are to promote to office by the exercise of our birthright?

The English are unfortunate, in one respect, in their national anthem and their patriotic lyrics—they can be sung by no one but themselves. There is little in the Marseillaise which does violence to the feelings or the pride of other nations, and of late years Americans have as fervently joined in the chorus as the French—in fact, in view of certain contingencies, much more so. There is nothing in the Star-spangled Banner in which all Europe might not join; it prays only that the flag of the country may continue to float over the land where it is now acknowledged. There is but one line in the two English anthems to which we can with propriety assent. We can hardly be expected to express the desire, in melodious cadence, that Britannia may rule the waves, as we take too deep an interest in our own week, but truly gallant navy; nor that the Queen's enemies may be scattered," as, unfortunately, we may yet be, politically, included among them; we cannot call upon Providence to "confound the politics," or "frustrate the knavish tricks," of all nations besides Great Britain, as we might be saying a bad word for a portion of our own diplomacy; but one line we may repeat as loudly as the most loyal Englishman, and in its sentiment we may and do as heartily concur—GOD SAVE THE QUEEN."

The engravings with which this work is embellished are beautifully executed, by some of the most distinguished artists, and we cannot imagine a more worthy Christmas present than the Women of Beauty.

THE TENANT-HOUSE; OR, EMBERS FROM POVERTY'S HEARTH-STONE. New-York: R. M. DE WITT.

Whatsoever woman turns up her divine nose and declares that her house is not fit to live in because ten minutes of the plumber's attention is demanded in her domicile, should be taken straightway, by her all-suffering husband, to look through a tenant-house. For the troubles that spawn in little minds, for the lack of what is elegantly termed a "sock-dologer"—a ripping, tearing grief that makes all moderate bitternesses of spirit taste sweet in comparison—there is no such sovereign remedy as a day of inspection among the tenant-houses. You never ring at the tenant-house door. It has a door, with a broken pane of glass through which most of the light enters, for it despairs of piercing the dust-covered, never-washed panes that are unbroken, but it was meant only as a dim suggestion to bad boys that the nasty alley upon which it enters is not the place for them to throw dead cats into. The main halls are all alleys, and whatever annoyances people who live in reputable houses suffer from filthy streets, the tenant-house people suffer in their horribly filthy halls. Ventilation, light, cleanliness, are things unknown in the best class of tenant-houses, while in the wretched rookeries, where thousands of still poorer families reside, to maintain the more obvious decencies of life is impossible. It is out of these forlorn tenements that Potter's Field drafts its great supply of material for the ditch. Out of them come nineteen-twentieths of the 1,142 victims of cholera infantum annually, nine-tenths of the 1,677 deaths by marasmus, as great a proportion of the 1,509 stillborn, and most of the 426 small-pox murders. The dispensary physicians make seven visits here to one that the house agent makes, and the echoes of his footsteps, the inmates think, never are unheard. When the cholera comes—these are its perpetual haunts, and it is about one thing to the cramped sufferers whether the physician treats heroically or expectantly—there is one issue to them all. If our citizens shall ever rise above their suicidal horror of meddling with their own politics, begin to cherish some sentiments of humanity in a sensible way, and take measures to relieve their City of the odium of a mortality table longer than any other city's on the continent, their first essay will be to purify and make decent the homes of the poor. So soon as we put the management of our sanitary matters into the hands of medical men of reputation and character, probably one-half of the tenant-houses in the City will be pronounced nuisances incompatible with the public health, and to be abated. Landlords build mammoth coffins, and rent them at rates that are small in the items, but exhorbitant in the aggregate, because they pay a larger per cent. than decent houses. But with health wardens frequently thrusting their orders to abate into their faces, houses fit to live in would soon become the better property. It is very well for philanthropists to erect model lodging-houses to let on reasonable and unprofitable terms, but it is an up-hill work, and not practicable on any large scale. The quickest method of reform is to tap the pockets of the Shylocks.

Very little attention has hitherto been given to this most important subject. Two years ago the New-York Legislature appointed a Special Committee to examine the manner of construction and mode of life in the New-York tenant-houses. The Committee took ample time for its investigation, and at the next session of the Legislature made a bulky report. It was understood that the author of the report was Mr. A. J. DUGANNE, who was Secretary of the Committee. Though his legislative connection with the subject has ended, Mr. DUGANNE does not stop meditating the impressive scenes revealed on his tour of inspection, and, as the result of his study, has just produced the series of sketches which make up the book whose title stands at the head of this notice. It is intended to illustrate, by fictitious examples, the sad realities of life among the immense population. The incidents are only fictitious, however, so far as names are concerned. He has done his work carefully, in the right spirit and with ability. His moral tone has the indorsement of nearly a score of our most prominent clergymen. He always writes grammatically and only too rhetorically, rather straining a point sometimes for effect. The volume is neatly brought out in the style which three years ago was very common, and has the appearance of the books of which there need to be sold fabulous editions, by publishers who say, ever since, that they would as soon publish a volume of logarithms as a novel with the expectation of making a large sale. But Mr. DUGANNE's book is well timed. It calls attention to a nuisance which has always been beyond our reach until now. On the 7th of December certain Aldermen are to be elected, who, with Mayor TIEMANN, are to appoint a head for the Health Department of the metropolis. If the right Aldermen are elected, a competent medical man will be selected for that post, and he, with the Deputies of his own selection, will have the whole question of tenant-houses or tenant coffins devolving upon his hands for immediate settlement. Intelligent voters only need to be reminded how much the morals of community depend upon the kind of influences that surround them in the sacred spots, however humble, rude or deadly, that they call their homes.

Lord Derby's Speech—Political Speculations—Mr. Bright and Mr. Disraeli—Personal Anecdotes—The Ionian Islands—Government Patronage, &c., &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Friday, Nov. 12, 1858.

Lord DERBY's speech at the Mansion House on Tuesday last continues to be a leading topic of conjecture and discussion in all circles. His reception was most flattering by the varied assembly, and, whatever his intentions were, he played his part well. His countenance during the Paul Pry speech of the bumptious Lord Mayor was a perfect comedy. There could not have been a more ill-conceived and ill-executed deviation from the established laws of neutrality, which had been observed time out of mind at the public banquets of the city, than his civic Lordship's lecture addressed to the Prime Minister on Parliamentary Reform; and everybody present, whatever might be his opinions, enjoyed the quiet but contemptuous snubbing he received, when the haughty, and at the same time humorous, Minister came to reply. Curious as people are to know what the existing Government mean to do about Reform, a unanimous feeling prevailed throughout the Egyptian Hall, in which the municipal banquet was given, that even if the Premier could tell what his measure next session was to be, he ought not; and his point-blank refusal to satisfy the vulgar inquisitorieses of his host excited no little merriment among all present.

Now that the laugh is over, however, and people have leisure to weigh what Lord DERBY did actually say, a very general impression seems to prevail that he has at length distinctly committed himself and his colleagues to a large measure of electoral change. As an old tactician he would never have had the folly to talk as he did of the cabinet being actually "engaged in maturing the details of political as well as social and financial measures of improvement," to be laid before Parliament in February next, which, "while in harmony with existing institutions, would be found to leave a lasting impress upon them." All the world believes, whatever their likings or dislikings may be, that the Derbyite cabinet has made up its mind to play boldly for popular favor in the coming struggle for reform, and all that one hears in private tends to confirm that impression. Alderman WIRE, the present chief magistrate of London, is a solicitor, formerly in good practice, and who, by the profession of ultra-liberal sentiments, has for some years maintained a position of notoriety rather than influence in the City. He has made one or two attempts to get into Parliament, but they have not resulted in much promise of success. He is a dissenter, and particularly obnoxious to both high and low church, on account of his carping and splenetic tone wherever the establishment is mentioned. I need hardly say that as political and social influence is now distributed in this country, any public man adopting a line of acrimonious sectarianism, whatever be his talent or sincerity, must prepare to have all he does or offers to do discounted at heavy rates by the public in general.

Nothing contributes more to lessen the weight and the width of Mr. BRIGHT's political influence than the fanatical temper he so frequently indulges in when speaking of the Anglican prelacy and priesthood. I was once standing near him below the bar of the House of Lords, when I perceived his gaze steadily fixed on the Bench of Bishops, none of whom had taken any part in the debate. After a few minutes he gave a low, inarticulate groan, still keeping his eyes riveted on the lawn sleeves. "What is the matter," I said, touching him on the shoulder. "Ah," he replied, in a deep voice, "you don't know what I feel when I look at those fellows sitting there." There is many a man who would heartily go with him in relieving their spiritual Lordships from attendance in a place which, legislatively speaking, they certainly do not in general adorn, who would not participate in Mr. BRIGHT's polemical aversion to their creed, or his political animosity to their order. It is, unhappily, but too true indeed, that save on rare occasions, the majority of the Episcopal Bench have proved themselves the passive instruments of maintaining public abuses and the humble waiters upon Court favor. Considering, however, the 6,000 Parson-power which they represent and govern, it is not easy to see how the cause of electoral reform was to be advanced by Mr. BRIGHT's fling in his speech at Birmingham, "At the adulterous connection between Church and State." I very much incline to think that his subsequent undertaking to introduce "a People's Reform bill," is meant rather as a threat than a promise to be practically fulfilled. I am firmly persuaded that all he wishes at present to accomplish is to prevent either Whigs or Tories carrying any bill this year, in the hope that the waters of popular demand may rise higher when dammed up by disappointment, and also that no more thorough-going Ministry may be in power twelve months hence. We shall see.

An amusing instance of DISRAELI's inveterate habit of irony and quizzing came within my own knowledge lately, in connection with the honorable and eloquent Quaker's name. A gentleman of the Whig Party who has inherited a large fortune, made by his father in trade, met the Chancellor of the Exchequer in company, and amongst other topics of casual observation, expressed a fear that Mr. BRIGHT's health was not perfectly restored, and that he would never be able to gratify his ambition for office on account of the wear and tear of work it would entail. DISRAELI, with ineffable gravity, replied, "I fear not; but the truth is these clever men, sprung from the counting-house or the factory, are not, as you know, equal to the strain of public life—they have not the real fibre in them, my dear Sir." My simple-minded friend who told me the story himself, could only see in his merciless persiflage, an additional proof of what he called marvelous impudence and forgetfulness of the pit whence Dizzy himself had been digged and it was not, of course, my business to undeceive him.

The diplomatic world has not yet done rubbing its hands and making merry at the sharp turn suddenly taken by the French Emperor on our Government regarding indentured immigrants to the French Colonies. His letter addressed to his cousin LOUIS NAPOLEON JEROME, as Colonial Minister, is a masterpiece in its way of Bonapartist Jesuitism. As you object to my taking negroes from Africa, pray let me have Coolies instead from Madras and Bengal: you find them answer well in Mauritius, so of course they will do in Reunion and Bourbon: meanwhile, let us suspend our importations from Africa into the Colonies, lest the [illegible]

A HAZING AT CHARLESTON.—A deserted paper says: A strange case of persecution of the sensitive stripling, was brought before the Lyceum of Police Court on Saturday. Two young ladies, the daughters of wealthy parents, in company with their governess were promenading along the Prince's Park, New-Road, on Friday afternoon, when a young man, said to be well connected, came up to them, and after a few impertinent observations in reference to their crinolines, seized the ladies' petticoats, and cut through their underclothes, and a handsome parasol attached, leaving the latter unfortunate completely out. He then ran away, but was afterwards taken into custody, and lodged in Bridewell. It appears the man labors under a monomania, or a sort of vindictive feeling against crinolines; and, on the application of his solicitor, he was admitted to bail until Wednesday next, when the case will be fully gone into.

At Berlin, M. Veit, a well-known bookseller of the Jewish persuasion, has been selected by the Liberal Party as one of their candidates for a place in the Assembly.

LAW REPORTS.

COURT CALENDAR.—THIS DAY—Dec. 1.

SUPREME COURT.—Part I.—Adjourned for the term. Part II.—Same as yesterday.

SUPERIOR COURT.—Adjourned for the term.

COMMON PLEAS.—Adjourned for the term.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT COURT.—Nov. 30. Before Judge Nelson.

Alexander Smith et al. vs. Alvin Higgins, et al.—The Court was occupied all day, and probably will be for several days to come, with the trial of this case, which was commenced yesterday. The plaintiff to-day put in evidence his patent, and after making out his prima facie case both on the questions of the patent, and the infringement by the defendants, proceeded to prove his damages, which are laid at $20,000. The plaintiff then rested his case, and Mr. Gifford proceeded to open the case for the defendants.

SUPREME COURT—CHAMB.—Nov. 30. Before Judge Sutherland.

Terry vs. Nelson.—The defendant gave a letter of recommendation to one Henry Saal, requesting the plaintiff to sell goods to Saal, and stating that not only is Saal good, but that he, the defendant, would himself be responsible for the debt which Saal should thus incur. Pursuant to this letter, the plaintiff sold Saal a bill of goods to the amount of $202 31, taking his note at six months therefor. Saal note was paid. Afterwards plaintiff held a conversation with defendant, in which the letter was mentioned, and defendant expressed his satisfaction that plaintiff had trusted Saal. Said he was an honest man, and good for a much larger amount, and that he hoped he (the plaintiff) would continue to sell him goods on credit. Plaintiff accordingly sold Saal another bill to the amount of $206, to recover which this action is brought against Nelson, the defendant. The Court ruled that the letter of credit covered the first transaction only, viz.: the bill of $202 31, the note given for which was paid by Saal; and that any further agreement on the part of Nelson to be liable for Saal's purchases must be in writing, with consideration expressed, as required by the statute of frauds. An attempt was made by the plaintiff's counsel to hold the defendant on another ground, viz.: that he was guilty of fraud by representing Saal as good, when he knew that he was not. Objection was made that the complaint was upon contract, and was not sound in damages as for a tort, which view of the case was favored by the Court, inasmuch as the complaint did not allege that the defendant's statements in regard to Saal's responsibility were wilfully false. The plaintiff's counsel then proposed to amend the complaint, but permission was refused, for the reason that Courts will not allow amendments which change the whole nature of the action. The Judge, however, allowed the plaintiff's counsel to give evidence for the purpose of showing fraud. Such evidence to be received subject to the defendant's exceptions. But the evidence thus offered did not, in the opinion of the Court, sustain the allegation of wilful fraud, and the complaint was dismissed.

Before Judge Mitchell.

Richard Warren et al. vs. Abraham Maybin and James Maybin.—This is a case which has been pending a number of years, and has been tried once before. The action is on a promissory note, dated 9th May, 1851, at four months, for $4,000, made by James McCauley, of Philadelphia, and accepted by the defendants.

It appeared that, at the time of the transaction, the plaintiff, a broker in merchandise in this City, received sundry consignments of goods from McCauley, on which advances were made. The times were tight, and the note was given to the plaintiff as collateral security. One month before the note became due, McCauley wrote to the plaintiff not to sell the goods at the then state of the market. This order was disregarded, and the goods were sold at a sacrifice one month before the note became due. The note at maturity was not paid.

The case was tried before Judge Mitchell in 1854, and the Jury found a verdict for the defendant. A motion for a new trial was argued before a Judge at Special Term, and the motion denied. The case was then carried up on a bill of exceptions to the General Term, whereupon the judgment of the Special Term was reversed, and a new trial was ordered. The case went to the Jury late in the afternoon.

Authentic News from the Pike's Peak Gold Region.

The St. Louis Republican has the following: Messrs. A. FRENCH, JOSEPH BEADE, WM. HAWLEY, T. C. DICKERSON and WM. SMITH, arrived in this city on yesterday, direct from Pike's Peak gold diggings. They left the mines Oct. 1, in company of fourteen persons, nine of whom remained at Lawrence, K. T. They are a portion of a company of forty-nine men, which was organized under the auspices of the citizens of Lawrence, for the purpose of prospecting in the Pike's Peak region, information of the discovery of gold in that section having been brought into the town by a party of friendly Indians. The different trains numbered collectively about five hundred men, with one hundred and fifty-seven wagons. The stock was in good condition, and, with the exception of the loss of a few cattle by one party, no accident had happened to any one of the trains. The emigrants were in fine spirits on being informed concerning the true condition of the mines, for the various indirect reports received along the route had somewhat dampened their ardor. About an equal number of emigrants were reported on the southern road.

Our informant states that there are, at present, about fifteen hundred persons in the mines, composed principally of Americans. There are a number of Mexicans and a few Indians. Yankee enterprise has already begun to manifest itself in the founding of two towns—one, St. Charles, situated at the mouth of Cherry Creek, and the other, Montano, about eight miles above the former. Buildings are going up rapidly. Provisions, though not superabundant, are sufficient to supply the immediate wants of the miners, and no very great suffering for want of food or protection during the coming Winter is apprehended.

Our informant says the general impression among miners is, that extensive deposits will be found throughout the mountains. The best diggings are located a short distance above the mouth of Cherry Creek, where six men can make from forty to fifty dollars per day. The mining implements are the pick, shovel and pan. Washings average about ten cents per pan, though our informant has known as much as four dollars to be obtained from one panfull of sand. It takes from four to five minutes to wash a panfull. In the regular mines, the "dust" is found from two to six feet below the surface among gravel and boulders. Reports have been started that the ore is to be found in lumps, but this, Mr. FRENCH says, is an erroneous idea, it being seldom or never found in larger grains than those the size of No. 6 shot heaten flat. He has some beautiful specimens of dust in vials, which appears as rich as any California gold we ever saw.

JAMES WEBB.

TO THE REPUBLICANS OF THE TWENTY-FIRST WARD.—The most persistent attempt is being made by persons who have never pretended to act with the Republican Party, and who by that party have been elevated to prominent positions, to sell out the Party in our Ward to the Know-Nothings.

Failing in their attempts to use the regular Association for that purpose they are resorting to every sort of trick and deception to effect their object.

These political jugglers think it very important that James Owens should appear as having the regular Republican nomination of the Ward when every Republican in the Ward of common intelligence and honesty knows that WM. H. ASPINWALL is the duly nominated candidate for Alderman of the Republican Association, and that James Owens could not be the nominee of the Republicans because he is not a Republican, but belongs to an opposition political organization, and therefore any nomination he may receive bearing his name is a deception and a dirty political trick.

Handbills are posted with the names of persons as indorsers of Owens, who will not vote for him, and have never nominated him, and know nothing of the handbills or their origin.

Again, a pretended tax-payers' meeting is paraded as indorsing Owens, which is of the same piece of deception, as no one knows of any such meeting, and we presume the names signed are used, as in other instances, without their knowledge or consent; we believe this from the fact that we are quite sure no intelligent tax-payer would, with his eyes open, ever indorse the action of Owens in voting (when his vote only was wanted) to override the veto of Mayor Tiemann and make the purchase of land on Ward's Island (a greater part of which is 6 feet under water,) by which the City was swindled out of thousands of dollars, or his vote for a street-cleaning contract, without any advertisement as the Charter directs, or his vote upon railroad matters, in direct opposition to all the mercantile interests of our City, for the benefit of lot speculators on Murray Hill.

And above all he is not a Republican, and his nomination as such is a palpable and downright swindle, and no man who professes to be a Republican can for a moment approve of any such nomination without a sacrifice of his party affinities.

For these and other reasons we call upon the Republicans of the XXIst Ward to stand by their candidate and their principles, and vote for that honest and intelligent regular Republican, WM. H. ASPINWALL, Jr.

Any other Republican ticket is a base counterfeit.

By order of the Association.

GEORGE F. COACHMAN, Secretary.

HESSER. Very great many citizens of the XIIth Ward.

GRAND GALA FESTIVAL,
On Dec. 14, 15 and 16,
in aid of the Fund of the MOUNT VERNON ASSOCIATION.
The Ladies' Executive Committee of the Mount Vernon Association take great pleasure in announcing that they have perfected arrangements by which they will be enabled to give a
to continue three days, and which will embrace a greater variety of entertainment than has ever been offered to the public on any occasion.
On (Tuesday, Dec. 14,) the First Day of the MOUNT VERNON FESTIVAL, will be given a
GRAND FULL-DRESS BALL,
(Grand Bal Parré,)
on a scale of unprecedented brilliancy—a great number of our leading citizens having consented to act as Managers, in order to render its success complete in every particular. On this occasion the same which produced such a great sensation last Spring in the Concerts given by him, will make his

will be given a great

when the splendid Ball decorations will be retained.

and part in the EVENING, AT 8 O'CLOCK.
The Committee have to state that they are now in correspondence with several of our most popular public orators, several of whom have kindly offered their services, and from others a favorable answer is daily expected.
The full particulars with regard to the prices of admission, names of the orators, patrons, managers, &c., will be given in a future advertisement.
TO THE PUBLIC.
It is now some four years since public attention was first directed to the imminent danger in which Mount Vernon was situated. As regards its possession, all attempts made for the purpose of influencing Congress to secure the House and Tomb of Washington as the property of the Nation have failed, and it was only the spirit of the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association, that, by its appeal to the country to recognise the disgrace which threatened it that they evinced any interest in the transaction; the result of that awakened interest was the foundation of a Ladies' National Committee, whose chief object was to raise means for the purchase of Mount Vernon. Through the efforts of Edward Everett, and others equally praiseworthy, has realized a large fund, yet the object for which this Association was created has not yet been fulfilled—a larger amount is yet necessary. They believe that a series of Festivals of the character now proposed, given throughout the entire country, will materially increase the fund. They confidently solicit the support, sympathy and cooperation of all true patriots in this most laudable enterprise.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

The screw-steamship Hammonia, of the Hamburg line, arrived here early yesterday morning, with advices from Southampton to Nov. 18. From our London files of that date we derive some paragraphs in addition to the details by the Arago, which will be read with interest.

The Royal Mail steamship Europa, a summary of the news by which, as telegraphed from Halifax, we published yesterday morning, arrived at Boston last night. Her mails will probably reach this City about 5 o'clock P. M. to-day.

A mass meeting was held at Leavenworth, Kansas, on Thursday last, to organize an opposition to the Republicans. Both wings of the Democratic Party were represented, and a reunion and reorganization of the Democracy were strenuously advocated and boldly debated—a strong minority characterizing such action as premature. This action was finally determined upon, however.

Later Utah news has been received at Leavenworth, Kansas, but there is nothing of importance from Salt Lake.

The case of THOMAS ALLIBONE and THOMAS A. NEWHALL, charged with conspiracy to cheat and defraud the Bank of Pennsylvania out of large sums of money, was commenced at Philadelphia yesterday, in the Court of Quarter Sessions. A motion by the defendants' counsel for separate trials was denied by the Court. Very little progress was made in the case yesterday, considerable time being spent in obtaining a Jury.

The election to fill the vacancy in the Pennsylvania Congressional delegation, caused by the resignation of J. GLANCY JONES, took place yesterday, and from the appearance of the few returns received, there is little doubt of the success of Gen. WILLIAM U. KERR, the Opposition candidate.

The agents from whom the Walker "emigrants" at Mobile purchased their tickets for a passage to Nicaragua, have given notice that, in consequence of the refusal of the Collector to grant a clearance to the vessel, the money paid will be refunded.

The mutineers of the ship Junior, who have been on trial in Boston, were convicted yesterday, the principal, PLUMMER, of murder, and the other three, CARTER, STANLEY and HERBERT, of manslaughter. Capt. DODGE, of the alleged slaver Isle de Cuba, was further examined yesterday, but nothing new of consequence was elicited. The trial of the third mate and part of the crew of the whale ship Cortez, for burning her in March last, was commenced yesterday.

The Grand Jury of the United States Circuit Court at Columbia, S. C., have refused to find bills of indictment in the three cases of the crew of the slaver Echo. The U. S. District-Attorney will endeavor to hold the prisoners, though it is believed he will not be able.

The Japan Treaty and dispatches from Consul HARRIS were yesterday delivered at the State Department by Lieut. TATNALL.

The Board of County Canvassers, which had been in session three weeks, made a final adjournment yesterday, having canvassed, after a rather stormy discussion, that the votes from the Fourth District of the First Ward should be counted in with the rest of the returns and forwarded to the State Canvassers. At the meeting of the Governors of the Almshouse yesterday, the report of the Committees on Supplies and Finance, calling for the appropriations for 1859, was adopted. Governor WASHINGTON SMITH stated his reasons for postponing the signing of the check of $1,500, drawn in favor of Dr. W. T. G. MORTON, the reputed discoverer of anæsthesia. He thought it illegal. Governor SMITH declared his intention of bringing the matter before the Courts, in order to compel Governor SMITH to sign the check. The Police Force are likely to experience financial difficulties; the appropriation of $388,578 for their pay having been exhausted, they will be compelled to wait until the 1st of February for a new appropriation; but, as they are sure of their pay then, they will not suffer greatly. It has been announced that Postmaster FOWLER had his pocket picked by some person at the enthusiastic meeting in Tammany Hall on Friday evening. Probably there was no other person in the meeting who had the imprudence to carry anything valuable in his pocket, or the same disaster might have happened to others. Our military companies and civic authorities are making extensive preparations to give a parting escort of honor to General PAGE and his suite to-morrow, when it is expected that he will be sufficiently recovered from the effects of his embark on his return to his native country, from which he has been so long exiled. The probabilities of the safety of the steamships Arago, the Indian Empire, are pretty generally discussed in commercial circles; but she is not regarded as a hopeless case by those whose judgments may be considered as reliable. That most venerable Association, the St. Andrew's Society of this City, celebrated its One Hundred and Second Anniversary last night, in the Metropolitan Hotel. Mr. ADAM BROWN presided. Speeches were made by the President, who introduced in turn, Mr. ANCHEL BALD, the British Consul, and Messrs. BRALIM, BRAMAN, VERPLANCK, BYRNE, &c., the representatives of the associate Benevolent Societies, by whom addresses in keeping with the occasion were also made. The day has been generally celebrated by the Sons of St. Andrew in the principal cities of the Union. There was a respectable, but not by any means a large meeting at the Cooper Institute last evening to further the interests of the new People's College at Havens, in this State, the corner-stone of which was laid this Fall. W. C. BRYANT, Esq., presided, and speeches were made in favor of the College by Hon. SCHUYLER COLFAX of Indiana, Rev. Rev. OSBORNE, PARSONS, and Doctor A. D. [illegible]. A considerable body of laborers have been employed from the Central Park and the excavations for the new Reservoir, and the wages of the men engaging on the latter work have been reduced to eighty cents a day—a lower rate than has been paid in this City for many years. The mechanics who were engaged in getting up "bread riots" in Tompkins-square last year at this time, intend to commemorate those gatherings by an anniversary meeting to-morrow, their numbers will probably be considerably increased by the discharged laborers from the public works. There were no less than three deaths reported yesterday from drunkenness. A course of lectures was inaugurated last evening at the Cooper Institute by Mr. G. B. FADER, who read an essay to a select audience on the History and Sphere of Commercial Colleges. The subject

[illegible] the labor market of the last year, it is a fact worth noting, that a firm has proposed to hire 150 or 200 of the male prisoners in the Penitentiary on Blackwell's Island at prices ranging from twenty to forty cents a day. It is proposed to make a commencement with fifty men, and to increase the number by fifty every thirty days. The Governors have the project under consideration, and will report upon it at an early day. The estimated sum required by the Governors for the Almshouse Departments for the year 1859 is $685,420 77. Dr. CHAS. T. JACKSON, of Boston, has addressed a letter to Governor GOVERNOR, which he read to his associates, calling for an explanation of charges made against him in reference to his claims as the discoverer of the anæsthetic properties of sulphuric ether. Gov. GOVERNOR, in reply, reiterates his charges instead of recanting them. Among the excitements of Broadway yesterday was a stampede occasioned by a mad bull, which instead of running down to Wall-street where he might have encountered a good number of competitors, rushed into the lager-bier saloon kept in the old gallery of the Art Union. There was a sale of pews in the new brick Church on Fifth-avenue last evening, at which great spirit was displayed, and a lively disposition to obtain eligible sittings. The first pew, which was valued at $1,500, was knocked down at a premium of $700 to JAMES CRAIG. The American General Committee, last night, endorsed the action of the City Committee, in nominating ROBERT T. HAWS for Comptroller, and FREDERICK C. WAGNER for Governor of the Almshouse.

A very important change is about to be effected in South Brooklyn, which will afford great satisfaction to the occupants of stores in Atlantic-street, in consequence of the resolution of the stockholders of the Long Island Railroad, in Philadelphia, proposing to remove the terminus of the road from from the South Ferry to Hunter's Point, which will be followed by the establishment of a horse railroad through Atlantic-street, from the ferry to Van Wyck-avenue. The news of the resolution by the Philadelphia Board of Directors was received with great joy in Brooklyn yesterday. The whole receipts for taxes at the Collector's office in Brooklyn up to last night, was $921,261 34. The books were opened on the 1st day of November.

The sales of Cotton, yesterday, were confined to 1,000 bales at steady prices. Flour, Wheat and Corn continued depressed. Provisions attracted more attention. Coffee and Molasses were quiet. Sugars, Rice, Common Rosin, Spirits Turpentine and Hides were in fair demand. Freights were quoted firmer, with moderate engagements.

Words and Deeds.

It is now alleged that the United States frigate Saranac has been ordered to the port of Guayamas for the purpose of talking order in the matter of certain differences between the Mexican Governor of the State of Sonora and an American surveying officer there employed, as it is reported, by a Mexican company. We have already pointed out the reasons which should induce this Government to select Guayamas as its point d'appui in dealing with the grave question of interference in the affairs of Mexico, and we shall be glad to learn that the mission of the Saranac is not limited to that particular case of difficulty between Mexican rulers and American citizens to which present rumor confines it.

Our hopes of immediate results from the said mission would be more lively, however, were it not somewhat dashed by the intimation that the Saranac before proceeding on her voyage must "wait for a part of her machinery, now coming out to her on board the Illinois." We ought to have become familiar with this sort of thing—but familiarity in this case breeds discontent as well as contempt; and nothing can quite reconcile us to the invariable calamities which attend every voyage of every American war-steamer. We cannot for the life of us understand by what subtle process of diéblerie the Government of these United States is so regularly thwarted in its attempts after naval excellence. Our merchant-marine is neither the clumsiest nor the least successful in the world. When men undertake to build steamers for the transport of goods and passengers, and for their own advantage and profit, they usually contrive to procure hulls that will float, and engines that will propel. The dockyards of the Clyde, the foundries of Indre, have no absolute monopoly of excellence in these industries. Why, then, does our national capacity always give way just where it ought to be most vigorous, and provide for the conveyance of the national honor and the national flag such flimsy tubs as the wise men of Gotham, who went to sea in a bowl, would have hesitated to charter? We ask this by way of parenthesis, merely, and with no hope of any satisfactory reply. The Venetians might have tried to extract an explanation from their Lion's Mouth, or the Egyptians from the Sphinx, as reasonably as the free-born sovereigns of this enlightened Republic from their official servants at Washington.

Whatever the merits, then, of the Saranac, or whatever the prospects of her possible mission, it becomes us at least to ask, if we may not expect some peremptory and positive action from our Government in regard to Mexico. Instead of "cherishing well-founded suspicions" that Spain and France and England "are about to do something" in that quarter, suppose our authorities should try to do something themselves. Does it never occur to any man in official station, we should like to know, that the occupations and the demeanor of a great Continental Paul Pry do not precisely fill up the measure of the grandeur becoming in a nation like our own? For our own part we are heartily tired and ashamed of Congressional speeches, public documents and Government recommendations, modeled on the telegraphic dispatches with which our duty as journalists condemns us daily to electrify the nation. In the whole matter of our dealings with Mexico and the Central American States, the American Government has for years past played the part of a gigantic bo-peep. We have been constantly on the lookout for some fearful ambush in which the ogre of Castile, or the lion of England was lying in wait for us. Our diplomacy has been constantly skulking on tip-toe, with a dark-lantern in one hand and a poker in the other, all about the precincts of the Gulf of Mexico. At any time since the year 1847 we have been upon the eve of being circumvented and hopelessly routed by our wily rivals. If we had spent upon one honestly-appointed and openly-authorized expedition for settling all questions at issue between ourselves and any of the Spanish American States, the money which we have lavished upon missions and counter-missions, public and private, for meddling these questions and bewraying the vile foreigners who were bent on undoing us, we should not now be pottering over the boilers of the Saranac, in a vague uncertainty as to "what will come of it?" Let us, in the name of all that is decent, have a full, frank statement of the actual condition of Mexico, made with authority by the Chief Magistrate of the Nation. Let us know precisely what wrongs we have suffered at her hands, and what reasonable demands for reparation have been refused by her. Then let us undertake, at once, efficiently and with as little noise as possible, the pacification of this unhappy country; finding out which of the parties that now distract it is most likely to work harmoniously with ourselves,—and so strengthening the hands of that party as to make all resistance to it hopeless, and to seat it firmly in power.

If we make upon this occasion of action equally bold with deliberation, society will sympathize with us. Questions of Spanish intrigues, of French interventions, of English diplomacy, may be left in the mud behind us and the telegraph. We shall meet them nowhere on our way, unless we summon them into being by the imbecility of an avowed policy. Executive recommendations without Executive action, and Saranac steamers incapable of steam, are the only things we have seriously to fear in handling the "question of Mexico."

Drift of the Political Current.

The Tribune a few days since turned its philanthropic attention to the unhappy case of the TIMES, which it declared to be "leagued body and soul with the enemies of the Republican Party, which it is doing its sly utmost to disorganize and destroy." With this mild and amiably dispassionate introduction, our neighbor launched out into an exposition of the various Anti-Republican heresies which we had been promulgating. We had expressed the opinion, it seems, that there was a lull in the Anti-Slavery agitation,—that the temper of the public mind was not friendly to its renewal,—that the Kansas question was settled,—that no party was likely to take ground hereafter in favor of Congressional intervention against Slavery in the Territories,—that the principle of Popular Sovereignty had come to be very generally accepted as the basis of all action upon Slavery, and that these things being so it was not easy to see upon what formidable issues the Republican Party was likely to enter into the Presidential canvass of 1860. We do not observe that the Tribune controverts any of these statements, or throws much light upon our political future. Indeed, their truth or falsehood seems to be, in its view, a matter of entirely secondary importance; the main point is that they are adverse to the growth and success of the Republican Party. Whether they be true or not, any journal which mentions them, even in the mildest and most dispassionate manner, becomes an "effective mouthpiece of the sham Democracy" and gives the Republicans a "smiling stab."

We do not complain of this style of attack—at least when it comes from the Tribune. In fact, any other style would be out of character, and would add to the pain of chastisement the grief of a disappointment. The Tribune takes pride in saying that, unlike the TIMES, it is a "Republican journal." It devotes its energies to building up the Republican Party—to strengthening its bulwarks, exalting its merits, concealing its defects, vaunting its successes, hiding, denying or explaining its defeats, and doing its utmost to put in office the men whom its machinery may designate as candidates for places of power. It adapts its means to this great end, and it very naturally dislikes everybody who does not work in the same harness, and for the accomplishment of the same object. And the Tribune is quite right in "counting us out." It says, with perfect truth, that the TIMES "makes no pretensions to the character of a Republican journal" in this sense, and that it is doing its best, in a quiet way, to repel "the imputation." We care nothing whatever for the success of the Republican Party, or any other party, as such. We subscribe to no party platform—put faith in no party objects—support no party candidates, wear no party badge, and do not intend to work for the accomplishment of any merely party end. All the honor, all the credit and all the profit of such service we freely relinquish to our neighbor. So far as we are concerned, it is quite at liberty to consider itself the only genuine, Simon-Pure Republican journal in this latitude. Our public service lies in another direction. We shall endeavor to tell the truth about all parties,—to represent their action and their opinions fairly,—to judge their aims rigidly and dispassionately,—and to support what we deem right, and condemn what we deem wrong, in them all. We may or may not, by so doing, help or hurt any of them. That is not our concern, but theirs. We shall do our best to damage any party which makes its own success in achieving place and power paramount to the public good,—and we shall do our best to aid any party in whatever it may do to promote the permanent welfare of the country.

Whether we are hereafter to be classed, therefore, among the "enemies of the Republican Party," will depend mainly upon the course which that party may adopt. If its principles and its purposes commend themselves to our judgments, we shall give it our support. If not, not. That is all. At present, as is quite evident even to its own leaders and expounders, both its principles and its purposes are uncertain and obscure. Its Pittsburg and Philadelphia platforms no longer define its position, for events have rendered them obsolete. The Kansas question, which was the main issue in 1856, is to all practical intents extinct. We find no general declaration of faith in the doctrine of Congressional legislation on Slavery in the Territories. We see no signs of agreement among Republicans in regard to the Tariff, or any of the other questions, domestic or foreign, which seem to be looming in the distance. The party is completely at sea upon them all. It may suit the Tribune's purpose—as it doubtless suits its temper and fulfills its mission—to pledge its support, in advance, to whatever ground may finally be taken upon all these subjects, and to whatever candidates may be selected for its advocacy by the regular party machinery. We decline any such pledges. When we know in what direction the Republican Party is going, we shall decide whether to go with it or not.

Meantime, we have been studying the political tendencies of the day with as much attention as possible. We shall be very glad to know at the earliest moment, in what temper, for what objects, and upon what issues, the Republican Party proposes to organize for the coming contest. To our unassisted vision the Slavery agitation has appeared to be subsiding. We have not been able to see clearly upon what issues connected with it the Presidential canvass of 1860 could be waged. Senator SEWARD, in his Rochester speech, intimated that the contest would be for the abolition of Slavery itself;—but he failed to make it quite clear to our minds, either that the mass of any party would join him in that crusade, or that even he himself was ready to lead it on. The Tribune repelled the construction first put upon his speech by his enemies, and denied that Mr. SEWARD proposed to wage any war upon Slavery as a local institution of the Southern States.

In this state of things—in the absence of any authoritative exposition of its creed and its aim—we have not unnaturally looked to the Tribune for indications at least of the views and purposes of the party which it justly claims to represent. Yesterday's issue of that paper contained a long and elaborate editorial upon the question of Slavery, (which it seldom discusses, as its readers know,) closing with the following emphatic paragraphs:

"The present position in which slaveholding and our labor system find themselves, is the result of the failure of all our past history, and was fully foreshadowed in the very first Continental Congress, and still more distinctly in the Convention that framed the National Constitution. In this state of things, it is in vain that the selfish, the quixotic and the timid, whether at the North or at the South, cry out 'Peace! Peace!' There is no peace. Mr. CLAY and Senator HAMMOND to the contrary notwithstanding. There is no peace, and until the great decision which now impending is fought, there can be none. The struggle has begun, and it must go on. Even grant that overweening and fanatical zeal has precipitated a contest which we would gladly have deferred, and, absorbing our own time in quiet, would willingly have thrown upon the days of our children, no matter. In this thing we cannot have our way. In such a struggle there can be no neutrality. It is time for every one to choose under which banner he will stand. Woe to him who, in this great crisis, shall prove himself a coward and a traitor!"

This sounds certainly like the signal of battle. The standards seem to be planted. The issue is apparently made up, and a certain portion of us are hypothetically proclaimed "cowards and traitors." It becomes somewhat important to know the nature of the fight—and we find it set forth, with tolerable precision, in the following letter from the Tribune's correspondent at the Federal Capital:

WASHINGTON, Monday, Nov. 29, 1858.

The city is rapidly filling up with its usual Winter population, though thus far, the arrivals from the South preponderate. There is a large body of Southern politicians at present in the Capital, who have come here to make arrangements, political and pecuniary, for the coming session. The impression prevails almost universally among these gentlemen that the Slavery question is settled, that the Anti-Slavery agitation has subsided, and that henceforth the topics with which the public mind of the country will concern itself are to be measures of financial and merely territorial interest. The family of these men reminds one of the ostrich, with its head stuck in a hole, and its entire huge body exposed to the hunter. Their knowledge of the North, their notions of the origin, tendency, progress and aim of the Anti-Slavery movement, are of the vaguest and most imperfect sort, formed either by blind and passionate conjecture, or from the misrepresentations of Northern dough-faces, who, as dough-faces, know themselves little or nothing of the Anti-Slavery movement, and are dough-faces, because they have not grasp of mind or elevation of character enough to comprehend it.

The slaveholders of late years have so stimulated themselves with fanaticism, so beclouded their own minds with swashy fallacies in the insane attempt to reconcile with Christianity and natural justice the practice of living on the earnings of others, and with Democracy and Liberty the forcible keeping of three or four millions of their people in bondage, that it is extremely hard to make them realize their true position, or understand the attitude in which they appear to the rest of the country and the rest of the world. All men whose eyes are not dazzled by the flimsiest of fallacies, can see that the slaveholding class in this country is nothing but an aristocracy, and that of the meanest kind. It is not an aristocracy dignified by titles, by high birth, long descent and illustrious services, but a contemptible nigger-driving, cotton-growing, tobacco-raising aristocracy, into which any one can get admitted who can scrape together a thousand dollars, and has not conscience or humanity enough to restrain him from buying therewith another man, and making him work all the rest of his life for his (the buyer's) profit and convenience.

In a Republic like this, founded on principles of freedom, justice, and equality of rights, the toleration of such an odious aristocracy for a moment could hardly be looked for, even if it confined itself prudently and quietly to its miserable business of nigger-breeding, cotton-growing and tobacco-raising, without undertaking to meddle with politics. Even in that case it might reasonably expect that the Democratic mass of the people would demand its suppression and abolition as a nuisance and disgrace to the country. But when this privileged class, with its two millions of capital, combines to control the Government, and assumes to make and unmake Presidents, to dictate who shall be Judges, who shall be Ambassadors, who shall be office holders, from the highest to the lowest; when it undertakes to put down freedom of the Press and of speech, and to proscribe and persecute all who are not servile to it; how can it expect to be let alone while the spirit of their fathers yet animates the free and proud and prosperous people of the North?

The struggle against the slaveholding aristocracy will continue so long as that aristocracy exists. Platforms may be made and unmade, Fugitive Slave laws passed and repealed, Kansas admitted, and a dozen other Free States admitted—but the Anti-Slavery agitation will not stop until the slaveholding aristocracy is subdued and suppressed. There may be lulls, and there may be reactions—there may be settlements and 'final settlements'—I remember, myself, six or seven of the latter since the first great one in 1834—but the Anti-Slavery agitation will continue and grow stronger and stronger every year, making issues, if it does not find them made. Our Southern friends may as well understand, first as last, that the only way to get rid of the agitation about Slavery is to get rid of Slavery itself."

This is not put forth, it will be observed, as the Republican platform, or in any avowed connection with the political canvass of 1860. It may have nothing to do with either. But in the absence of all other and more authoritative declarations, it may serve as a straw to show which way the Tribune's political bark is drifting. That representative and organ of the Republican party is evidently inclined to make the abolition of Slavery the direct and immediate issue in the coming Presidential canvass; and it denounces as a "coward and a traitor" every man who does not rally to its standard. If this is its purpose, it can put us down at the head of its list of "traitors and cowards." We shall be early in the field, and shall answer to our name the instant we hear it called.

Our Currency System.

There can scarcely be a higher compliment to the financial soundness and prosperity of this State, than the desire which is manifested in certain quarters to trifle with and tinker its monetary system. Were there the smallest appearance of distrust among the public, in regard to the solidity of our Banks, the gentlemen who are now endeavoring to agitate for a revision of our Banking System, and whose interests are, in the majority of instances, identical with the prosperity of the State, would do anything rather than call into question the soundness of the policy which has just carried our Bank Note Currency successfully through the most difficult crisis to which it has ever been subjected.

The efforts of the parties who are seeking to agitate the question here referred to, are chiefly directed to two points. They desire to abolish the authority to issue notes of a smaller denomination than ten dollars (or to drive them out by a Federal stamp tax,) and to regulate the specie basis of a Bank in proportion to the amount of its deposits. The first of these measures comes partly within the scope of State legislation;—the other cannot properly be brought under the influence of a statute unless by a totally unnecessary departure from previous usage, and an unhealthy interference with matters which, being in by far the greatest part commercial, may safely be left in commercial hands.

The avowed object of those who would procure the abolition of the Bank Note Currency, is the substitution, in all the ordinary transactions of life, of Gold and Silver for this part of our Bank issues. In urging the measure, much stress is laid upon the fact that the Bank of England issues no notes of a less denomination than £5, or about $25 of our money. Now, apart from the consideration that the differences which exist between the circumstances, commercial and social, of England and this country, should make us pause and reflect long, before rushing into a blind imitation of her banking policy—it is worth noting that in France, long the most specie-worshiping nation of the world, it has been found desirable of late years, to lower the denominational limit of the issues of the Bank of France, and to make a monopoly of small notes, to the extent at present existing, of the private bankers of Paris.

But, in judging this proposition from a domestic point of view, we have a right to ask, and long, in whose interest and for whose advantage is it made? If for the sake of the Banks, it has yet to be shown that the safety and soundness of those institutions, under our present laws, have been compromised by their small issues. We may, at least, be certain that the diffusion of these small notes among all classes of the people has tended to diminish the risk of sudden runs upon the banks in times of financial disorder. We have based the credit of our banks upon the credit of the State, involved in the public stocks, against which the notes of the banks are issued, and have thus indirectly fortified the credit of the State to the extent of the interest which our citizens hold in those notes. Is it for the sake of the State, then, and of our citizens, that the change upon which we now comment is sought to be made?

While the bills of New-York banks are in every respect equal to gold for all internal purposes, they are useless for purposes of exportation. As soon as they are driven from circulation, and bullion takes their place, the market will be drained, not only of specie, but of the only medium which enables workmen to receive payment for their labor—in short, of the only medium of circulation among a numerous and important class of the people. The case might perhaps be different if we were chiefly a receiving country. But the contrary is the case. We are rather a paying than a receiving country. The balance of trade, under our present revenue policy, would be generally against us, but for the gold which our country produces largely, and which we are, more or less, always exporting to neutralize this balance. If, therefore, we are to guard against possible danger in the future, let us prepare ourselves to meet the possible emergency, when, through failure of our cotton or bread crops here, or through a reduction in the demand from Europe for cotton or bread, we may be called upon to pay more gold than we have obtained from our mines. It is not difficult to see what our position would be in such a not impossible emergency, if, in the absence of small notes, our minor currency were entirely in gold and silver. The country would be swept of that currency before any remedy could be applied, and we should be forced to issue small bills, unsupported by the public confidence which our present system creates.

But still graver questions are raised by the proposal to limit by law the amount of Bank loans in a fixed proportion to the amount of Deposits. The authors of this proposal can hardly have reflected upon its character. It would virtually convert the Legislature into a Board of Bank Directors, who are to do the business of every other Board of Bank Directors in the State. Doubtless, there are many simpletons, and, perhaps, not a few scamps, to be found in the lists of our Bank Directions by those who should know where to look for them. Doubtless, also, the benches of our Legislature are habitually occupied by angels in black satin waistcoats, whose wisdom and benevolence are the sole hope of the land. But if our Legislature are to interfere in the business of our Banks for the purpose of saving them from their friends, we see no reason why they should confine their wholesome energy to these institutions alone. There are Railway Companies in the State whose affairs do not appear to be managed with perfect sagacity; there are banks in the City who are in danger of bankruptcy, and merchants whose books cannot easily be posted. The principle of legislative intermeddling is one which needs no tender fostering care. 'Tis a hardy plant, likely to grow as fast and as well as the service of the State can require. Banks are business corporations. If they are ill managed, the last loss must be their own, and the only safe remedy the public distrust. To their own interest, and the supervision of those who deal with them, the care of details of their management may be safely left.

There is a worthy old adage which bids us "leave well alone." Our commercial finance is satisfactory to the great majority of the people, and is avowedly safe and conservative. Let us "neither meddle nor make." There are many other channels in which the energy of the few restless spirits engaged in its attempted reform can find ample scope. Our City Government is in crying need of reformation; our police system sadly needs revision; the approaching Winter will find, we fear, an unusual number of poor men, women and children suffering unusual destitution. There is in many directions much that is evil requiring reformation. Let us get done with our real troubles before we take up those that are imaginary. Let us carry into execution the reforms that are really necessary before we spend valuable time in theorizing the reform of what is already practically good.

Amusements.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—"Lucrezia Borgia" was played on Monday night to a fair house. The cast was a remarkable one; remarkable for its novelty rather than the expectation it excited. No one who has seen Mme. PIccolomini in her best impersonations could expect that she would be tremendous in the masterly rôle of Lucrezia, requiring as it does the strongest manifestations of fierce womanhood, and a range of passion a little higher than anything Mme. PIccolomini has yet essayed. It was perhaps a stroke of good managerial policy to present the lady in this character, and the result was not altogether a failure. In the first act Mme. PIccolomini sang massively well. She identified herself so completely with the character that all her usual coquetries were for a time forgotten. The finale, however, was not a remarkable performance. In the second act the most noticeable insufficiency of the general cast became apparent. The duet between the Duke and Lucezza, the trio with Genarro, and the concluding duet between the soprano and tenor were failures. The struggle between motive and method resulted in the discomfiture of Mlle. PIccolomini as a prima donna. Clever and delightful as she is, and much and creditably as she exerted herself, the part of the Borgia is beyond her powers. Herr FRAMM, as the Duke, was simply bad. The tenor, Signor TAMAGO, unhappily, labored under a severe cold, and failed to do himself justice. Under these untoward circumstances the work dragged, owing all its vitality to Mlle. PIccolomini. The artists were called out, one of them in the spirit of championship rather than of appreciation. To-night the "Nozze de Figaro" will be given for the last time.

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—SHERIDAN'S splendid comedy, "The School for Scandal," was revived here last night for the purpose of introducing Mr. RAMAGE—an actor of European and American reputation—in the part of Sir Peter Teazle. The general distribution was admirable, and included the names of Mrs. HOEY, Mr. LESTER, Mr. BROUGHAM, Mr. TITUS, and other leading members of the company. Mr. RAMAGE is an excellent actor. His performance was marked by an unusual perception of the best points of the text, by a quiet bearing, and a thorough knowledge of stage business. His physical powers are well suited to the dimensions of Wallack's Theatre; he can be seen and heard to advantage, and will undoubtedly become a favorite.

DODSWORTH'S SALOON.—ARTHUR NAPOLEON, the young Portuguese pianist, of whose remarkable performances we have before spoken, gave his second series here last evening. The attendance was better than on the first night, but still insufficient as a mark of appreciation of the very remarkable powers possessed by this young artist. It almost goes beyond to say that in many respects he is one of the best

CITY INTELLIGENCE.

THE KEDIVE'S STEAMSHIP-INDIAN EMPIRE.—The steamer Indian Empire, of the Galway line, and bound for Boston, twenty-one days, and had not been heard from since she left Liverpool. Naturally a great deal of speculation prevails in regard to her safety. She left this port on the 3d of October, and encountered with a brig in the harbor, which kept her over night at Quarantine, encountered a severe gale on the way to Halifax, and left that port on the 20th for Galway. The Indian Empire was commanded by Capt. Comment, and her chief engineer was Mr. Chester Asbury, who, it will be remembered, held the same position on board the General America at the time of her wreck. Although the most competent persons who were on board the steamer at the time of her loss attributed the disaster, in part, to Mr. A., his subsequent exoneration, by a Commission of Experts, in this City, formally acquitted him of blame and he obtained employment on board the Indian Empire. The Indian Empire was formerly the steamer United States, and was built by Wm. H. Webb in this City, in the most substantial manner, under the supervision of Capt. Chadwick. Afterwards she was sold to the Peninsular Confederation, and was called the Peninsular. She was then sold to parties in Great Britain, and her name changed again, reverting to the Indian Empire.

During the time she was employed in transporting troops to the Crimea she was thoroughly examined by the inspectors of Lloyds, and found to be sound on the day she was launched. She is accounted one of the best sea boats afloat, but she is very slow—so say those who are acquainted with her sailing qualities—with large passage in her. A wag once knew her owner of friends proposed to the owners that they should put another pair of paddle-wheels into her, and then sell her to the Government for a Gunboat. Slowness. She was seven days getting to Halifax on the present voyage. To relieve in some degree the present anxiety about the Empire's safety, it may be stated that, by way of experiment, to make a saving in the loss of fuel, the agents have put on board of her more than two-thirds of her complement of coal in anthracite, (some 600 tons,) instead of Cambriated coal, which she had been accustomed to carry. The difference would be about $1,000 in cost. This is probably accounts for the delay. The agents have no concern for her safety, although they are annoyed at her excessively long passage. She carried sixty-two passengers in the steerage, twelve in the second cabin, and four in the first cabin,—making a total of seventy-eight. The crew were mostly shipped in Europe, and there is no list on this side of the Atlantic. We hope to hear of the Indian Empire's safe arrival at Galway by the Liverpool steamer due there next week.

SALE OF PEWS IN THE NEW BRICK CHURCH.—The sale of pews in the new brick church, corner of Fifth-avenue and Thirty-seventh-street, took place last evening. The body of the church was half full of people. At 7½ o'clock Mr. HORACE HOLDEN, one of the Trustees of the Church, stood up, and after alluding to the removal from the Old Brick Church to the new edifice, the sale of the former and the money expended in erecting the latter, announced the forms of the sale which was about to take place. Diagrams of the church were distributed, with the prices of the pews affixed; the highest bidder was entitled to select a pew in any part of the church, with the privilege of purchasing an adjoining pew at the same premium. The pew rents commenced on the 1st of November, and the first half-year would expire 1st of May next, when the yearly rent, payable in advance, would begin to accrue. The annual rents to be assessed on the pews would be fixed by the Board of Trustees after the sale, without delay, and would not exceed 7 per cent on the first cost of each pew. To the best pews in the body of the house, $1,500 was the price affixed; $1250 was the price of the least eligible pew in the gallery. Mr. ABRAM H. MELLIS was the auctioneer. About one-half of the pews in the body of the house were sold during the evening; none in the gallery were sold. There were sold at a premium, 45; of these 15 were sold at an advance of $10—the lowest premium sold for was $25. At 8½ pew, was first sold; and brought the highest premium. The first bid was $100, and was offered by Mr. JACOB CRAM, a distiller, who was one of the congregation of the old Brick Church, as were most of those who purchased pews in the new edifice. Mr. SAWYER offered $110, and with slow advances, each bidding $10 or $20 at a time above the bid last offered, the premium was run up to $300, and was knocked down to Mr. CRAM. Mr. Mellis, a retired auctioneer, gave a premium of $200 for pew No. 94, on which there was a fixed valuation of $1,000. The next pew sold—No. 56—was knocked down to Mr. EGGLESTON at $170 premium. Several brought $140. DANIEL LOZIER, PAUL SNOFFORD, BERNARD KNAPP and the Rev. Dr. ISAAC FERRIS were among the purchasers of other pews at a lower price. Pew No. 42 was reserved for the pastor. The Rev. Dr. SPRING himself was present, and attended to the selection made by the members of his congregation with a great deal of interest. There was no competition on any of the bids except the first. Everything was conducted very quietly. It was announced that pew-scrip of the old church would be received at par value as purchase money, but the premiums must be paid in cash. The deeds will be ready on Saturday, Dec. 11, between 11 A. M. and 2 P. M.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT OF THE COUNTY CANVASSERS.—The Board met at 1 P. M. yesterday, the President ELIAS T. PERRY, in the Chair. Mr. BURNS presented a preamble and resolutions reciting the history of the difficulty with regard to the discrepancies in the returns from the Fourth District of the First Ward, and providing that all the papers relating thereto, together with a certified copy of this preamble and resolutions be sent to the Board of State Canvassers; that the Chairman and Secretary of the Board proceed to comply with the provisions of the United States, in making the proper returns, and that the same be published. Considerable debate followed. Mr. PERRY intimated that the preamble and resolutions were concocted in secret conclave. Mr. KERNEY and Mr. BURNS stoutly denied the insinuation. The Board took a recess about 3 o'clock, and at 3 o'clock the members reassembled. The President read the mandamus served on him by the Supreme Court, requiring the Board to make an immediate estimate of the votes cast for the various candidates in the recent election. Mr. KERNEY said the resolutions of Mr. BURNS proposed just what the mandamus required. The writ was laid on the table. Mr. BURNS offered some amendments, the question of which was lost by a tie vote. Mr. BURNS's resolutions were adopted, (ayes 5, noes 4,) and his preamble was lost by a tie vote. The Board proceeded to make the estimate of the aggregate returns. Mr. PERRY inquired what the vote was expected to be in the return from the Fourth District of the First Ward, from which the votes had been stricken out? Mr. KERNEY replied that he was, and stated that he (Kerney) had stricken out the vote when a resolution in favor of condemning the return was lost by a tie vote. Mr. BURNS questioned his right to do so. Mr. PERRY signed the record under protest. The Clerk then read the official return of the Board. Mr. VOORHIES proved that the votes of the Fourth District of the First Ward to connect in with the returns, in accordance with the mandamus. Mr. KERNEY suggested that the mandamus should direct that the votes be attached to, and not counted in with, the returns. Mr. VOORHIES offered a new resolution in accordance with the suggestion. Mr. BURNS then offered Mr. VOORHIES original resolution as an amendment, which was carried (ayes 7, noes 4.) Mr. VOORHIES was excused from voting, and Mr. BURNS voted for the Republicans. Voted in the affirmative, Mr. KERNEY, Mr. BURNS and Mr. STOW. Mr. PERRY positively refused. The Clerk finished the footing of the returns, and the Board adjourned sine die.

PAY OF THE POLICE SUSPENDED.—The appropriation ($200,000) to cover the Police expenditure for the present year has been exhausted. To-day, which is the monthly pay-day, the usual payments will not be made. There are 1,397 on the pay-roll, and the announcement to those that the money due them for their past months' labor will not be forthcoming, has occasioned a good deal of grumbling—a very natural result. Unless money can be borrowed by the Police Commissioners, the Policemen will have to work without pay until, at least, the 1st of February, at that will be the earliest date at which the appropriations for the ensuing year will be made out and get passed upon by the State Legislature.

A MAD BULL ON BROADWAY.—An infuriated bull, of mammoth size, made his appearance, yesterday afternoon, on Broadway. Lady pedestrians retired, with desperate haste, into convenient stores, and gentlemen were not slow in following their example. The bull usurped majestically along the centre of the sidewalk, barrying all before him. This bull, unlike his historic predecessor, did not seem to have any propensities for a China shop; on the contrary, he took a fancy to the hall leading to the Old Art Union Rooms—now, alas! used as a liquor saloon—and, entering there, evaded an little precaution

THE GAMBLING HARPIES BAD MAMMON.—For a few days past an extraordinary excitement has prevailed, which, at the date of going to press, had not subsided. Some days since, it was whispered or given out, that the gamblers, after the most approved English fashion, had a mere carnival on Monday, upon the fact that was connected that particular portion of the universe where, in accordance with first impressions, the best blood should have been. The result was an excited leader in the Tribune upon the necessity of killing rats, and a consequence, though much more moderate, excitement among the rat-terrier fanciers of the City. The time announced was Nov. 29, and the place, Kerrigan's Hall, White-street, the entire exhibition to be under the management and supreme control of HARRY JAMESON. The exhibition was to have commenced at 7½ o'clock with a magnificent display of dogs, but owing to the lack of interest on the part of the artist having the erection of seats in hand, the show did not commence until a much later hour. During the interval the gentlemen present (there were no ladies) occupied themselves in examining each dog as were visible, and listening with anticipated pleasure to the vested squeals of some one hundred and fifty caged rats, that were doing their best to eat each other. Finally, the opening of the exhibition was announced, and all parties were desired to take seats. A table was brought in, and the cloth was laid. At this moment, a Chinaman, who had not been noticed before, was seen pressing forward, until he had obtained a position commanding one entire side of the table. He then set down and an expressive smile, not unmingled with a potent desire that they would serve them up, illuminated his gamut visage—he was evidently thinking of his dear native land and its "rats and sauces for pies." HARRY gave the word, and some fourteen black and tan terriers were brought forward, the bandsmen for all properties to win a purse of a silver goblet. The Judges took them up and examined them with professional eyes and fingers. First their mouths, then their heads and ears, then their coats, and finally their narratives, underwent thorough inspection. During this interesting process the spectators maintained perfect silence. Nothing could be heard save the barking of angry dogs, and the squealing of the rats that were in boxes in a corner, notably anticipating their tales ends, until an interested individual vehemently desired to known whether "all dogs tails were to be considered alike, whether they were shaved or no." He was summarily invited to "shut up," and to "go and shave his dog's tail if he didn't like it." He accepted the first proposition, and the examination went on, and resulted in favor of CHARLESON's dog "Toby," which was declared the handsomest and took the goblet. Then there was a moderate display of bull-terriers, the handsomest to win a silver-mounted collar. The dogs underwent the same manipulations that the others had done, and the result was that FLETCHER's dog "Billy" received the collar. HARRY now brought back one of the black-and-tan terriers, and exhibited a tan-colored spot under his left ear, which he said was the beauty spot, and showed that the dog wasn't black where he ought to be tan, or tan where he ought to be black—an announcement that was received with great favor. The next was an exhibition of bull dogs, the highest bred to win a silver-mounted collar. Only two animals were shown—BUTLER's "Tumbler" and FLETCHER's "Billy." There was some difference of opinion as to whether either was a pure bull-dog. HARRY decided that there was not a pure bull-dog in the whole room, and the Judges decided that "Tumbler" was the highest bred, so he took the collar. Thus far the exhibition bore a very faint resemblance to the Committee Examinations of Animals at a racing fair. But here the resemblance was lost entirely, for now HARRY jenters the arena with a large box of rats, squeaking as before, and announces that "the sports will open with a handsome specimen of a leopard, who will kill six rats, in good style." He then rams his hand through an opening in the box, and throws out one after another, and sometimes two at a time, into a circular pit, about nine feet in diameter. The spectators are in extacies, because of the ease and perfect safety with which he handles the rats. He takes them by the head, and by the tail—anywhere, and they do not bite him. The first thus thrown out were very large and well conditioned. The Chinaman drew nearer to the pit, and his eyes glistened with delight. He had seen the dogs one by one, and experienced great disappointment from the appearance of all of them, excepting one that was quite young. The others were very thin, and looked tough. But here were rats large and fat, and the Celestial was pleased—but only until the leopard came out and mangled them. Then dark envy was his only expression. After the leopard had finished his half-dozen, which he did rather slowly, but effectively, the black and tans were brought in and handicapped—each dog to kill one rat for every two pounds he might weigh. The heaviest dog was HARZE's "Jack," which weighed 22 pounds, and consequently, had to kill eleven rats in the same time that several dogs weighing 7 pounds, had only to kill three rats, with 5 seconds added to their time for the odd pound. When the first batch of rats were thrown in, there was great difficulty in keeping some of the more youthful spectators back from the edge of the pit, but they were finally induced to be seated, and then FLETCHER entered with his dog to destroy eight rats. The word was given, and the dog went at them, his master jumping about in the pit all the time, as if he had suddenly gone mad, his object being, apparently, to keep the rats well together, so that the dog might kill them the sooner. When the last rat had given his last dying squeak, he caught up his dog and called "Time." He had killed them in 1 minute and 22 seconds. Other dogs were taken in and killed their various quantities in much the same way—the more experienced giving a rat but one bite and a shake, while the younger ones took more time, and sometimes shyed when a rat bit them instead of their biting him. The contest finally resulted in favor of ROGER's "Pet," a seven-pound dog that killed three rats in thirty-six seconds. During this exhibition the spectators seemed to derive as much amusement from the frantic efforts of the men in the pit to keep their dogs at work, and the rats from running up the legs of their pantaloons, *as from the killing. One man, who was slightly inebriated entered the pit, with a 7-pound dog, and after dancing about wildly for some time, took up his animal and left the pit. He was discovered immediately that there were but two rats there, and there were cries of "Fool." HARRY pursued the inebriated individual, brought him back into the pit, and then running his hand up between his back and his coat, brought forth a rat, that unfurmed had taken shelter there. Of course great applause was the consequence. Another rat ran up under a man's pantaloons, and made him feel very unpleasant. His efforts, which were continued for some time, to get the rat down again, furnished great amusement for the spectators, who enjoyed it amazingly. When the prize had been awarded, HARRY announced a "grand battle royal—fifty rats to all dogs that choose to enter," as the finale. He then brought another box of rats, and, putting in both hands, threw them out by half-dozens, until over fifty were running about the pit. The excitement now was very great. Every man who had a dog rushed with it to the edge of the pit, and waited with eagerness for the word to let them in. The Chinaman could not get a glimpse, so he ran around for a time in a state of alarming perturbation, and finally mounted an empty rat-box close by the pit. The word was given, the dogs were thrown in, and for a few moments, during which every rat was killed, the hall resounded with the shouts of the delighted spectators. Very few of the rats killed by the dogs were mutilated, and when our reporter left, the Chinaman, purse in hand, was in earnest conversation with HARRY, the rat-killer.

PICKING THE POSTMASTER'S POCKET.—Postmaster FOWLER had his pocket picked at the ratification meeting at Tammany Hall, on Friday evening, of a pocket-book containing notes and checks to the amount of $2,000, and $23 in bank bills, which was carried off. The notes and checks, which were of no value except to the owner, were remitted next day to Mr. Fowler by the thief, who, as a matter of course, retained the bank bills. Mr. Fowler says he is satisfied. The thief, no doubt, is gratified.

THE MOUNT VERNON MOVEMENT.—A great festival is in preparation for next week in aid of the funds of the Mount Vernon Association. It is to continue for three days, and will embrace a grand ball, a concert, and two or three orations by distinguished orators. It is under the direction of the lady officers of the Association, aided by a number of our most prominent and influential citizens.

CITY POLITICS.—The American General Committee held a meeting last evening, and adopted the following resolutions:

Resolved, That the action of the City Convention in the nomination of ROSANA T. HAWS for Comptroller, meets our hearty approbation, in the fact that he is the most acceptable candidate nominated.

Resolved, That this General Committee give our hearty approval of the City Convention in nominating FERDINAND C. WAGNER for Governor of the Almshouse.

FREE LECTURE-COURSE AT COOPER INSTITUTE.—The course of Free Lectures to be delivered during the season, before Bryant and Stratton's Mercantile College, in Cooper Institute, was inaugurated last evening by Mr. S. S. PACKARD, the Superintendent, in a lecture on the "History and Sphere of Commercial Colleges," delivered to a large audience in room No. 22 of that building. The lecture was a concise and able review of commercial education in this country, abounding in wholesome suggestions and happy illustrations, and clearly showing the advantages of a thorough training in the science of business. The idea of a free course of lectures to young men, under the auspices of such an institution, is one that should be hailed with pleasure, and be met in a spirit of generous appreciation. We learn that the lectures will be delivered regularly on Monday evening of each week by the prominent speakers of the City, upon topics of general interest.

THE LATE BENJAMIN F. BUTLER.—The remains of the late BENJAMIN F. BUTLER having arrived in the steamer Arago on Monday, the funeral services will take place at the Mercer-street Church to-morrow, at 3 o'clock. Arrangements have been made for a meeting of the Bar in reference to the death of Mr. Butler. It will be held in the United States District Court-room, on Chambers-street, this afternoon, at 3 o'clock. Judge NELSON will preside, and Messrs. KING, LORD, BROWNE, NOYES and EMMONS are expected to take part in the proceedings.

CORONER'S INQUESTS.

DIED IN A STATION-HOUSE.—Monday evening, a First Ward policeman found an unknown man lying in the street greatly intoxicated. He had the man of idlers by adopting at once a plan for the new Hall, and availing themselves of the appropriation which has already been made for that work, though it may not be half so large as it should be, and undoubtedly will be. It is well for our public authorities to bear in mind the exigencies of the season, and not to neglect until the last moment to make provision for a numerous class of our people who will not be so glad of the opportunity of the season, and not to be glad of work. The promoters of the scene of last December are already at work again, and they are taking steps to stir up a spirit of a festival and discourse by celebrating the anniversary of the first turn out last year. A banner is to be presented to somebody and a grand demonstration is to be made to commemorate an event which everyone, and especially those who were engaged in it, ought to be most desirous of consigning to oblivion.

THE BENTON LEGACY.
SIXTH VOLUME—NOW READY,
AN ABRIDGMENT
OF THE
DEBATES IN CONGRESS,
From 1789 to 1856.
From Gales and Seaton's Annals of Congress; from their Register of Debates in Congress, and from the Official Reported Debates by John C. Rives,
BY THE AUTHOR OF THE "THIRTY YEARS' VIEW."
To be completed in fifteen vols., 750 pages each, comprising what is now contained in over one hundred volumes of which have been issued.
Price, Cloth, $15; Leep Sheep, $18 50; Half Morocco, $4; Half Calf, $4 50.
SOLD BY SUBSCRIPTION ONLY.
"I feel justified in expressing the belief that I have rendered a great public service to the Union. I have rescued a valuable (and I hope attractive) to the whole reading community the history of the formation of this Union, and of the spirit out of which it grew, and of the spirit in which it was administered, carrying the noble vessel safely through every danger for near seventy years. I have made all this knowledge accessible to every reading man; and knowledge is power—especially by political power,—and as necessary to adorn a public man's life, as to enable him to legislate beneficially for the country and avoid the mistakes and errors which often mortify himself. That is one object of the Abridgment, and a high one—but not the highest. The highest lies among the most exalted of human actions, among the objects which would reconcile a distracted Union by showing the examples of moderation, of justice, of national defence, which joined us together and kept us together. The Abridged Debates will abound in such examples, and from men of such noble character as will command veneration and imitation."
THOMAS H. BENTON.

W. B. MACKENZIE, No. 502 Broadway,
THE GLORY OF VERSAILLES.
From Harper's Weekly.
Among the palaces of France the Palais des Thermes, the Louvre, Malmaison, the Elysee, magnificent though they were, that of Versailles took precedence. When Louis XIV. ascended the throne of France, he became discontented with the beautiful palace at St. Germain. From his windows he could discern, at no great distance, the towers of L'Eglise St. Denis, beneath whose gloomy walls repose the dust of the Kings of France; and the royal sensualist, too much in love with life ever to reflect on death, determined to remove from the shadows which those sacred walls threw over his mind, and in what was then the Bourg of Versailles, at the cost of $200,000,000, he created a palace for himself, his favorites and courtiers, that surpassed in magnificence the wildest dreams of those who had preceded him. A circuit of sixty miles inclosed the immense park, in the centre of which the kingly palace was unshrouded; and as if by magic a magnificent city took the place of hill and dale, fern and forest, and wealthy nobles reared their princely homes near the royal residence, and a hundred thousand citizens thronged the streets of gay Versailles.
Babylon, in all its glory, was eclipsed by this modern giant of splendor and voluptuousness, and millions toiled throughout the length and breadth of the land to feed and clothe these proud patricians, and to administer to their indulgence. The nobles of the Bourbon Court, in all the extravagance of aristocratic pomp and pride, crowded the brilliant Salle de l'Opera and the gorgeous Salons de Dance. Prodigality and voluptuous joy ruled the hour. This was Fashion's home; and she, king over all—even over royalty itself—dictating alike to potentate and prince, to royal mistress and to the Queen of France, Adolf de la Maire, the Court Costumer, presided. In all matters of dress, of taste, of decoration, his dictum was supreme. He held the place of Master of the Robes, and each morning, after the valets and gentlemen of the royal chamber had performed their various offices, with the utmost solemnity of etiquette, Monsieur de la Maire approached to dress the King, and one by one he handed to the head valet the various articles to be worn by Majesty; and no article, from the garter to the royal robes, could be worn unless sanctioned by this dignitary. After breakfast the services of la Maire came again into requisition, to dress the monarch for the Cabinet. Again for dinner, and after that for supper. And imperious royalty, self-willed and exacting upon every other point, ever bowed in acquiescence to the will of Maitre des Robes.
Louis XIV. passed from the scene, and in the course of time Adolf de la Maire was gathered to his fathers, leaving his wealth and place to his son, August la Maire, who ruled as potent in the world of fashion as did the King over the world political.
But he, too, passed away, and his descendant, Victoria Maire, fashioned the garments in which the XVIth Louis and the unfortunate Marie Antoinette stood before the altar at Versailles, in consummation of that nuptial rite, in which terminated in the most melancholy tragedy the world has ever known.
Political dynasties changed, the Bourbons were driven from the throne, and returned to it. But though different monarchs swayed the sceptre over the land, the family of la Maire continued, through every change, to hold the reins of fashion. Son succeeded father, generation after generation, and dictated what was and what was not fit to adorn the royal form, and set off to the best advantage the queenly beauties who thronged the court. And when the man of energy, of action, and of intellect came to usurp the place of the sensual, the voluptuous and the vain; when the Corsican soldier came to think, to do, to toil, day after day, and night after night, to promote the prosperity of France through all its varied interests, one would have thought that a man like la Maire would have been overlooked and that he would have had cause to have exclaimed "My occupation's gone." Not so, for when the monarchs of Europe, with their united millions combined, had chained the democratic king to the bleak rock of St. Helena, and replaced the Bourbon on the throne, a certain Ambrose la Maire was left the King of Fashion still, as he had been during the reign of the Corsican. Revolution followed revolution, still the la Maire, with a tenacity that scarcely has a parallel, and which can only be accounted for on the ground of their wonderful capacity for the rôle they played, held their place, so that even now, when the nephew has succeeded the uncle; and driven even more the Bourbons to flight and exile, a descendant of that name Adolf la Maire, who presided over the toilet Louis XIV., is the Costumer for Pimperatrice, and still sways the sceptre over the world of fashion. True, the les Maires no longer confine their presence to Versailles, but one Jean de la Maire, from his throne, Rue Neuve St. Augustine, Paris, dictates to all Europe the style and fashion of their garments. He speaks, and crinoline expands its graceful circuses, or contracts its vast dimensions within the sphere he circumscribes, and to the house of la Maire the ladies of our own country are indebted for nearly all the graceful novelties in shape of mantillas, robes, &c., that are worn by the élite. So great has been the demand from this country upon that famous house that at last he has been forced to concentrate his trade with this country to a single depôt, where, at all times, his late novelties will be found, and through which all orders will reach him. The person whom he has selected for this important place is our well-known costumer, Mr. WM. B. MACKENZIE, No. 502 Broadway, whose name has long been the synonym of all that is elegant, distinguished, and tasteful. In order to afford a place where the rich fabrics of LA MAIRE may at all times be seen to the best advantage, and where he could have sufficient space to keep the large assortment of which he is in constant receipt properly in view, Mr. MACKENZIE has leased and fitted up a Palais des Modes, three doors below the St. Nicholas Hotel, where the votaries of fashion will find the latest novelties of the fickle goddess. Mr. MACKENZIE then makes one of the principal features of Paris a part of our own metropolis, and we predict that it will not be long ere the branch house of LA MAIRE, in Broadway, will be as famous as the great original of Rue Neuve St. Augustine, Paris.

NECESSITY, JUSTICE OR POLICY of the same, but, on the contrary, do still believe in the ABILITY OF THE TRADE IN THIS CITY to support at least ONE STRICTLY WHOLESALE HOUSE.
To this end they now invite the attention of all those in any way interested, to their very complete stock of embracing the richest as well as the most common varieties,

[illegible] and absolutely impartial [illegible] contained in the above bill of [illegible] fair trial, it is necessary [illegible] by awarded to him by the [illegible] probability that the defendant [illegible] in their challenges; and that [illegible] may exercise the right of chal-lenge, which the law gives him, it is necessary that a separate trial should be awarded to him; that if he is not tried separately the Jury may be embarrassed and the Defendant's witnesses interrogated upon a[illegible] of transactions which may be admissible against his co-defendant, but which have no connection whatever with his deponent. T. A. NEWHALL.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 30th day of November, 1858.

WILLIAM OGLE, Alderman.

AFFIDAVIT OF MR. ALLISONS.

Mr. BRYWERS then read the following affidavit of Mr. ALLISONS:

Thomas Allisons being duly sworn according to law, said—That he is entirely and absolutely innocent of all the charges contained in the above bill of indictment, and that he verily believed that to secure to him a just and fair trial, it is absolutely necessary that a separate trial should be awarded to him. He shows to the Court the following reasons in support of this allegation:

1. He is informed, and verily believes, that he and his co-defenders will sever in their challenges.

2. That in the event of a joint trial the Court and Jury may be embarrassed, and the case of this deponent improperly affected by evidence of transactions admissible only against his co-defenders, but which have no connection with defendant.

THOMAS ALLISONS.

Sworn and subscribed before JAMES E. DAES, Crier.

We certify that in our opinion a separate trial is proper for the protection of defendant ALLISONS.

G. M. WHARTON.
F. CARROLL BREWSTER.

For defendant, ALLISONS.

Mr. LOCKERAN filed his solemn protest against the severance of the defendants, and argued with considerable spirit against it.

Mr. WM. M. BREWSTER replied to the District-Attorney, urging the motion of the severance of the defendants.

Judge THOMPSON overruled the motion of Mr. THATER and Mr. BREWSTER.

A jury was then impanelled, and the trial proceeded.

District-Attorney LOCKERAN opened the case of the Commonwealth to the jury. He said, in two counts of the bill of indictment, the defendants, as President and Directors of the Bank of Pennsylvania, are charged with conspiracy to defraud the Bank, in the other count they are charged with an attempt to defraud the Bank. This Bank was chartered in 1799 with a capital of $3,000,000—In 1810 and 1836 was re-chartered; in 1844 the capital was again reduced to $1,352,000; its capital was again increased to $1,500,000, and was then in a prosperous condition. In 1853 ALLISONS was elected President, and NEWHALL was instrumental in securing his election, and was his boom friend. When Mr. ALLISONS was absent NEWHALL acted in his place; NEWHALL and ALLISONS's son were in partnership together in the sugar refinery. Mr. LOCKERAN then proceeded to explain to the Jury the law as applied in this State to conspiracy, and explained many of the alleged fraudulent transactions which took place in the Bank while ALLISONS and NEWHALL were Directors, and also gave an account of how NEWHALL had taken many notes due the Bank after their suspension, and also narrated to the Jury the circumstances connected with Mr. NEWHALL's obtaining the bill of Exchange for £17,000, drawn by the Bank upon a firm in Liverpool. Mr. LOCKERAN also explained how NEWHALL, with ALLISON's consent, removed notes.

The case was then adjourned.

MESSRS. CROOK & DUFF'S DINING SALOON.—The Dining Saloon of Messrs. CROOK & DUFF, in the THREE Buildings, has taken the front rank. It has two entrances, on Park-row and Nassau-street, an unusual advantage, rendering it very convenient of access. The main room is a lofty and spacious apartment, paved with marble and handsomely frescoed in walls and ceiling. The furniture is uniform and elegant, and the accommodations altogether comfortable and inviting. The proprietors bring the results of a long experience to bear upon the conduct of their establishment. They have spared no expense in the fitting up and adornment of their premises, and provide a choice bill of fare for the benefit of their customers. The basement is fitted up with a bar, lunch-room and smoking apartment, furnished with comfortable sofas, and, like the upper saloon, runs through from street to street. The appointments for the toilet occupy a separate apartment, and are arranged upon a liberal scale, with marble basins, costly French mirrors, and all modern conveniences. The culinary department, occupying the whole depth of the building, is arranged upon a plan of extraordinary completeness. Its ranges, bake-houses, washing apparatus, and all the paraphernalia of the cuisine, have been constructed upon the most approved principles. The refreshing cleanliness of this part of the establishment, the order which pervades its departments, and the careful oversight which is exercised in its management, are whetters of appetite. It is not every lower region of a dining-saloon that will bear a close inspection. This one courts it. The man who is permitted to examine it, comes away with a vigorous appetite, enjoys his beef-steak with a keen relish, and sips his soup with confidence. Crook & Duff are good purveyors, as well as capable managers, and please the palate by a sumptuous array of the "good things of life." They are reaping a deserved reward in the patronage of an excellent class of customers.

TUESDAY, Nov. 30—P. M.

The improvement of yesterday afternoon in the Stock Market continued through most of the dealings of the day. The volume of business is not yet large, and the continued weakness of several of the Western Roads prevents the rise from becoming very general. The favorites on the Share list seem to be nearer home, New-York Central leaving the market at 83⅛@⅞ ⅌ cent., with sales of about 5,000 shares, closing 83⅛@¾ ⅌ cent. Quite a spirited demand has sprung up for Erie, at 18¼@18@17¾ ⅌ cent., closing 17¾@17½ ⅌ cent. The November traffic on the Road promises to settle up better than last year, and this circumstance, added to the previous improvement in October, (the first month of the new fiscal year,) has turned attention both to the shares and common bonds of the Road. The Convertibles of '71 sold at 42, and for the '75s 43½ was bid. Reading was firm at the opening, but subsequently fell off on orders, apparently from Philadelphia. The fiscal year of the Company closes to-day. Hudson River was firmer than yesterday, and the Bonds of the Company in good request. The same feeling obtains in the Bonds of the Harlem Company. In Pacific Mail the early business of the day was at 95@94¾ ⅌ cent. ex dividend—the feeling among the stockholders seeming to be well satisfied with the 10 ⅌ cent. declared yesterday. In the afternoon the stock closed 93½@94 ⅌ cent. Panama remains steady, with few parcels offering. Harlem preference shares recovered ½ ⅌ cent. of Saturday's decline, selling 29½ ⅌ cent. At the early Board Galena was in fair request, at 72¼@72, but the price closed 71½@¾ in the afternoon. Rock Island left off 61@61½ ⅌ cent. The State Stocks were firmer on the Europa's news, and Illinois Central Bonds ½ ⅌ cent. better. The shares keep dull. The general market left off dull. The majority of the jobbers at the Board and on the Street, though not so large for the Bear account as last week, is still against the rise.

The Bank exhibit of this morning is favorably construed, and Money rules in steady supply and at the moderate rates quoted for some time past. The financial opinion of the Street inclines to continued ease through the Winter. The business of importation through the latter weeks of December and the months of January and February is expected to be liberal, yielding a timely revenue to the Treasury, but otherwise creating no disturbance in the market for money. The business in Exchanges for the Boston steamer left off 109¼@109½ on London; £5 17½@£5 15 on Paris, a fair amount of transactions for an indirect packet. The Cotton market holds firm. The Export movement from the Southern ports is less than last week by 22,000 bales. The following is the

MESSRS. WRIGHT & Co., in their weekly Circular of to-day remark on the crop prospects:

"We find more difficulty than usual this season in arriving at a conclusion as to the probable extent of the incoming crop, and must wait some time, to receive the report from the district of country west of the Mississippi River, before determining our estimate. No doubt now exists but that in the Atlantic States, Alabama and Texas a large increase is already secured. The only question is now in the region tributary to New-Orleans, where, until lately, the promise has not been for a large yield. The letters of the latest dates, however, are more sanguine of a better result than was expected, owing to a fine Autumn and the absence of a killing frost until 16th and 17th November. The opinion generally adopted here and in the South, with but few exceptions, is 2,500,000 bales, with the chances in favor of something less."

The Journal of Commerce would leave us a categorical answer to the safety of New-York country banking with 2.00 ⅌ cent. in Gold. We answer with pleasure, YES: It is safe. Made so by our Banking Laws, which require to be lodged with the Bank Department that which is better than Gold, because equally secure and more productive; and require, besides, City redemption, at all times, for the country circulation. Would our neighbor know how this country system worked through the terrible ordeal of the late crisis? We will tell him. The liquidation was equal to $6,383,264 for circulation alone from June to December, 1857. The loss to the public, through the whole year, was not one mill to the dollar of the sum liquidated. There was a subsequent settlement after December of $7,940,000 country circulation through the City Banks. It was met to the last penny with 5.69 ⅌ cent. ⅌ annum interest.

But, if we understand our neighbor, he is alarmed also for the Country Deposits. They amount to $25,609,085. Ignoring, if you please, the City balances due to the Country, the ultimate security for these deposits is $49,369,859 in Capital, and the personal liability of the stockholders for a like amount. Aside from this, however, the relations of country banking on Deposits in this State to the City of New-York, is almost identical with that of the Joint-stock Banks of London to the Bank of England. There is little or no Gold used or required to be used in either case. The Bank of England carries the necessary Bullion for the whole system. The Banks of New-York City do the same for our State system. The London Joint-stock Banks are not more reliable to-day than the Banks of Brooklyn or of Albany.

The Commercial says of the Long Island Road:

"A meeting of stockholders of the Long Island Railroad was held at Philadelphia yesterday, at which more than one-half of the whole stock was represented. A unanimous vote was taken in favor of the change of terminus from South Brooklyn, to Hunter's Point, provided it can be effected on the terms and conditions stated to the Board of Directors. By the arrangement, if completed, the Long Island Company will be relieved from the lease of the Jamaica road, which will probably be converted into a horse road, and of a new line of three miles to be built to connect it with the Long Island road at Jamaica. The Long Island Company are to pay $416,666 in ⅌ cent. bonds, having thirty years to run, secured by mortgage on the Hunter's Point property, and absolutely free from all other liens, which, with the bonds already issued, make the total amount of the Company's bonded debt, when the Hunter's Point property is added, $1,250,000. The Company are to pay $100,000 in cash, and the balance, $1,000,000, in ⅌ cent. bonds, payable in five years, with interest
